

Establish good governance to ensure human rights

Speakers tell workshop

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

As in the present governance system people's participation is limited to electing the representatives only, the country needs a system of self-governance to ensure rights of people, said Justice Mohammad Golam Rabbani at a workshop yesterday.

The workshop on 'Rights and Governance' was organised by Women for Women at Cirdap auditorium in the city.

Speaking as chief guest Justice Rabbani said self-governance needs local government having administrative and financial power to carry out development activities.

He said although the caretaker government is talking about reforms, it has failed to present a guideline for reforms in the absence of a self-governance system.

The workshop was organised to disseminate the results of Rights and Governance Project funded by Manusher Jonno Foundation.

The project aims at improving the government service system through the development of skills of government personnel for establishing a good governance to achieve the Millennium Development Goals.

Adopt strategy to protect rights of migrant workers

Speakers urge South Asian countries

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A three-day regional dialogue yesterday recommended that South Asia should have a mechanism to monitor the state of labour migrants both in sending and receiving countries to protect their rights, as migrant workers are subjected to exploitation and abuses.

South Asian speakers said the countries can involve all stakeholders, including international organisations, NGOs, independent women's organisations, media agencies, migrant associations and civil society organisations, in the process.

The region should also adopt a regional legal instrument on migration based on international human rights laws to uphold migrants' rights, they added.

International Organisation for Migration (IOM) and United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) jointly organised the dialogue on 'Implementation of international instruments on protecting rights of migrant workers' on August 18-20 at a city hotel.

Government representatives from Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka as well as from international organisations, NGOs, civil society groups and private sector took part in the dialogue.

Acknowledging that South Asia is a major labour sending region and their workers overseas face similar challenges, the speakers said the region should have a common strategy to address the challenges of labour migration and develop an institutional framework at official level to facilitate the process.

"Speakers said there could be shared solutions to these challenges. Therefore, there is a need for cooperation and collaboration in the field of labour migration among these countries," said IOM regional representative in Dhaka at the closing session yesterday.

The speakers further noted that women migrant workers are particularly vulnerable and they face exploitation of specific forms that emerge from discrimination based on their sex, gender and the nature of their work, which

The women leaders demanded exemplary punishment to the killer to avoid recurrence of such incidents in the country.

In another statement, Bangladesh Trade Union Centre President Nurul Islam and Secretary Dr Wajedul Islam Khan said as teasing women on the streets by derailed youths is not considered as a crime and the youths involved in teasing are not arrested by the law enforcers, such spate of killings are increasing rapidly.

They also demanded immediate arrest of the culprit as well as forming social resistance to combat such crimes.

require a special attention.

The dialogue suggested that South Asian countries should set up institutions for capacity building of overseas jobseekers, enabling them to be competitive in accessing the global labour market and exchange information and expertise on global labour market.

The speakers said South Asian countries should also consider institutionalising the cooperation between IOM and Saarc through the conclusion of an MoU for better migration management.

At national level, the regional dialogue suggested adopting gender-sensitive policy on labour migration and providing support to migrant workers and their families for protection and welfare.

It said the governments should establish a national committee on migration comprising all stakeholders in migration, including IOM, UNIFEM and other international organisations, NGOs, independent women's organisations and civil society organisations, migrants' associations as well as the private sector.

The speakers said the governments should also sign bilateral agreements with the labour receiving countries and strengthen the capacity of their missions abroad to ensure protection, entitlements and monitoring of the entire migration process.

The governments also need to consider ratifying the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of Migrant Workers and Members of their Families, the dialogue said.
