Gayle keeps it alive

AFP, Napier

West Indies captain Chris Gayle made a timely return to the century ranks Monday to ensure a final day showdown in the second Test against New Zealand at McLean Park here.

Gayle, unbeaten on 146 -his first century from 24 Tests in three years -- provided more than half of the West Indies total as they ended the fourth day at 278 for seven in their second innings, for an overall lead of 214.

chance to end the West Indies innings before the final day when they had the tourists at 106 for four.

But they were thwarted by a valuable 124-run stand for the fifth wicket by Gayle and Australian-born Brendan

With no Shivnarine Chanderpaul to rely on after the world's most prolific batsman in the past two years fell on the first ball, Gayle and Nash dug in to bring the West Indies back into the Test.

Gayle started in fiery form, but became more watchful as his century neared, spending 15 overs in the 90s.

On 99 he offered one of his few chances when he played upishly to midwicket and the ball fell just short of Daniel Flynn.

He then offered a chance going for his 100 when he stopped in the middle of the pitch and had second thoughts about the run before he saw Jeetan Patel misfield at point and he was able to get home for his century.

By the close of play he had been at the wicket for nearly five-and-a-half hours in an innings that included 13 fours and six sixes.

For the West Indies, survival through the day mattered most. They only scored 216 runs in the three sessions but ensured they would go into the fifth day with three wickets to build a demanding chase for New Zealand.

Nash, in only his second Test, provided valuable sup-

The number of phone conversations going on down on the Liverpool bench suggested Benitez, in touch from his sick bed, wasn't a happy man. But he would have been celebrating in front of the television as Liverpool snatched an equaliser against the run of play in the 42nd minute.

Agger's long punt forward should have been dealt with by Johan Djourou, but he allowed the ball to bounce past him and Keane took full advantage, sprinting clear of the Arsenal defender before driving a first-time shot past Almunia.

Two riveting matches played over the past two weeks may have given Test cricket under breezily on a wearing Chennai decade. Indeed, this year has pitch to stymie England's been the best ever (yet, since victory bid last week. Perhaps the outcome of three Tests is even more sensationally, South still awaited) with 34 out of 43 Africa beat Australia at Perth on Sunday by making a whopping target of 414 seem like a stroll in the woods.

Africa won by six wickets respectively, the margin of victory does not quite reveal the intrigue and drama, the absorbing ebb and flow of fortune that defined every hour, every day of these two contests. What emerged from these was not mances and results, but perhaps also a new ethos for Test highest wicket-takers with cricket in the 21st century. When Don Bradman's Invincibles had incredibly chased 404 in the fourth innings against England in 1948, it seemed that record would stand the test of time. It did, for 28 years, till India made 406 to beat the West Indies in 1976. In the past 15 years, however, 400-plus fourth innings targets have been knocked down successfully twice (West Indies versus Africa on Sunday), not to men- cricket, and especially in this tion a host of other stiff 300-plus millennium, is being defined targets, including India's win more by adventurism and over England at Chennai which was the fourth best of all-time.

Nine of the 25 highest run chases have come since 2000, serious threat from Twenty20 statistics reveal, which clearly for spectator and sponsor shows a skew or trend. approval the kiss of life it so Significantly, the ratio of results to draws has also shown a India chased down 387 dramatic upswing in the past matches yielding results.

What explains this? Inclusion of weak teams like Zimbabwe and Bangladesh has While both India and South obviously boosted the over all results tally, but it is also true that in the 'upper echelons' of the game the contest between players and teams has become keener, often spectacular. Better quality willow has obviously made batting that much easier, but bowling skills have just extraordinary perfor- surely not diminished if you consider that some of the fantastic strike rates are all from this era: Shane Warne, Muttiah Muralitharan, Anil Kumble, Courtney Walsh, Curtly Ambrose, Glen McGrath, Shaun Pollock, Allan

> Donald to name a few. Moreover, fielding standards have reached astonishing levels too, so batsmen don't enjoy too much advantage as assumed.

What has clearly changed is opportunism than conservatism. Rewards of money and fame have grown dramatically, leading to greater expression of both individuality and collective excellence.

Time-held game theories are being turned on their head as captains and players experiment and improvise to win one-on-one battles, sessions of play, and through these also matches. The derring-do necessitated by one-day and Twenty20 cricket, to be fair, has also contributed substantially in cricketers 'opening up' to challenge old dictums. The new one could be a line borrowed from a commercial: Impossible is nothing.

Meanwhile, the fact that Australia have now lost two successive Tests at Perth, considered the graveyard for touring teams, apart form a 0-2 hiding in India, has busted their aura of invincibility and Test cricket now heads for perhaps its most exciting phase in the New Year with four or five teams believing that they could be numero uno.

Whether all this can resurrect Test cricket to pristine position is a moot question, but for those who cherish such cricketing values, the magic is still alive. (The article was taken from the
