

Test of hope as polls today after 7 years

INAM AHMED

A new dawn beacons as some eight crore voters walk down to polling centres today to elect a new government, a democratic one after seven years -- five years in political quandary and two years in a reverse reconnaissance and correction bid that many may find not up to the mark, but a worthwhile try.

By tomorrow morning, either of the two political alliances -- one led by Awami League and the other by BNP -- will walk victorious. But that will only be the beginning of a new journey to the searching question of how the body politics wants Bangladesh to be propped on the world map as a piece of land with the proud people who hold their heads high with justifiable cultural, economic and social achievements.

It is a difficult time for any political party to take over for many practical reasons of national and international origins.

The country today faces an ever-yawning gap between the rich and the poor, with the top 5 percent of the society taking a stake in 26 percent of the wealth and the bottom 5 percent trying to hold on to their dear 0.77 percent of the pie. A society that splits deeply in wealth and education, in culture and values, in logic and reasoning, poses a high danger of going astray if not led to the right light-house. A society of divide and high contempt for pluralism soon finds itself in a dungeon. A country that cannot find its own breadth and depth -- that cannot find its treasure trove of history and value -- will only swivel off the road into the wilderness.

Only a worthy leadership of honest and capable men and women, of visionaries and doers, can see the risks of staying too long on such a perilous edge and value the worth of going forward, pushing away all the inert inwardness of the dragging force. It is truly a time for political correctness.

It is also a time for going beyond one's self into the far-flung horizon of global affairs to fathom the depth of the

Khaleda to vote at Adamjee Cant School

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia, who conducted a whirlwind electioneering in about 45 districts out of the 64 in 16 days, spent a relaxed day yesterday just attending a few informal view exchange meetings with journalists and poll observers after evening.

She visited the Jatiya Press Club and had the day's first staff meeting with media persons.

Looking back at events of last 2 years

RAKIB HASNET SUMAN

The country is ready to return to normal through today's election after a lot of dramatic turns of events during the last two years' rule under a state of emergency that resulted from confrontational politics.

The root of the crisis lies in the BNP-led four-party alliance government's passing the 14th constitution amendment bill on May 16, 2004 to extend the retirement age of Supreme Court judges to 67 from 65. The then opposition rejected it outright, terming it

Cast your vote wisely

CA tells nation

UNB, Dhaka

Chief Adviser (CA) Fakhruddin Ahmed has urged the electorates to cast their votes wisely and appealed to the political parties to gracefully accept the results of today's crucial general election.

"Let us get united and participate in an appropriate democratic process. I hope tomorrow's parliament elections will be a classic example not only for our nation but also in the international domain," he said in his address to the nation over radio and television last night.

In his apparently last national address as head of the caretaker government, Fakhruddin told the voters that the stature of their

CEC warns poll officials again

UNB, Dhaka

Chief Election Commissioner (CEC) ATM Shamsul Huda has urged the voters to cast their votes judiciously in today's national election.

"Don't vote at the instigation of anybody, cast vote by using your intellect and conscience to achieve your cherished dream," he said in a televised address to the nation last night.

The CEC also directed the presiding and returning officers across the country to discharge their election duties impartially and in accordance with the election rules and regulations.

"I ask all returning and presiding officers to discharge their assigned duties neutrally. If

Campaign goes haywire

Cartons filled with Tk 41.5 lakh seized in Ctg; several other BNP-Jamaat men held across country with cash to buy votes

STAR REPORT

The worst of election scandals could not be averted after all this year either, as Chittagong police yesterday recovered a large sum of money allegedly to be used for buying votes, while quite a few people were arrested almost all over the rest of the country too on charges of attempting to buy votes and other violations of the electoral code of conduct.

Our Chittagong correspondent reported that the port city police last night spotted and confiscated

Tk 41.5 lakh hidden in cartons of soybean oil cans, as it was being transported by a car. The discovery was made when the driver of the car stopped at a police check post at Andorkilla intersection.

According to law enforcers, the vehicle belongs to a man named Javed, son-in-law of Shamsul Alam, a four-party nominee in Chittagong-8 constituency also a leader of BNP. The cartons were also of Shamsul Alam's oil company, Dada.

The driver, Khorshed Alam, was arrested and was undergoing interrogation at the time of filing this report in the first hour of today. Javed and an accomplice however managed to escape.

Quoting the arrested driver, police said Javed and his accomplice were going to Baklia slum with the money.

Chittagong Metropolitan Police Commissioner Mohammad Moniruzzaman and other high officials of police visited the spot.

When contacted, candidate Shamsul Alam said, "That is not my money." Asked why the money was being hidden in cartons of his oil company Dada, he replied those cartons can be found in many places.

"The whole affair was staged to humiliate me before the election," he alleged.

Presiding officer of Tangail-2 poll centre of Pholdah Momtaj Uddin High School, Shafiqul Islam, was arrested by police last night after being caught red-handed while he was stamping ballot papers with the seal of the Election Commission, which he was supposed to do page by page in front of each voter today. The arrestee however said he was just trying to get

Dhaka slums under vigil

Rival candidates active in thwarting vote buying bid

JULFIKAR ALI MANIK

Thirty-year-old Nurul Islam was standing casually with some friends at the entry to a Mohammadpur slum on the eve of election. No one would suspect they were in fact 'guarding' the slum so that the rival candidate's men could not 'buy' votes.

"We have installed many check posts here. Our men will stand on guard and patrol the slum to check any move to buy votes," he said yesterday afternoon.

His associate Jamal said they were working for Awami League candidate Jahangir Kabir Nanok of Dhaka-13 constituency.

"We have directives from the leaders to stay alert all night long until voting ends tomorrow," Nurul said.

Such an organised move was not visible from BNP candidate Moazzem Hossain Alal's campaign. But some slum dwellers supporting Alal claimed BNP campaigners are also vigilant to foil any attempt to buy votes.

Recalling past experiences a number of slum dwellers said electioneering is totally different this year.

2001 still haunts Hindus in Barisal

EMRAN HOSSAIN, from Jhalakathi

Sixteen hours before polls, the Hindus in Shuktagar Union Parishad in Jhalakathi-1 constituency were still confused about casting votes as a new trend of intimidation has been introduced.

They have not forgotten the night before the eighth parliamentary election in 2001 which brought them some horrible experiences. The musclemen of former BNP lawmaker Shahjahan Omar, a graft accused, swooped on them with lethal weapons, trained guns on the men, assaulted the women and guarded their houses so that they couldn't go to poll centres.

The Hindus said those who dared to start for the polling centres were blocked on the way and beaten up irrespective of gender.

Anil, who made it to the polling centre, was stripped off his clothes in a public gathering during a victory meeting of BNP the next day, they added.

Shahjahan was so cruel to the community that even the poor among them had to pay his musclemen toll during wedding of their daughters to save them from being snatched from the bridal stage.

Polls to witness record security

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has deployed about six lakh security personnel across the country to ensure the holding of a free, fair and neutral parliamentary election peacefully.

The security members include 50,000 army personnel, 70,000 policemen, 6,500 Rab members and 4.66 lakh Ansars.

This is the first time that such huge numbers of security personnel are deployed across the country for holding the national polls peacefully.

Besides, Bangladesh Rifles members would keep guard in 70 of 87 frontier upazilas and army personnel in 16 upazilas to ward off any subversive act.

Moreover, 18 units of strike forces comprising members of Bangladesh Navy and Coastguard will remain
