Cover Story 8-15

A River in Distress

It was once a river where strong currents flowed giving it life and vibrancy. Over the last few years, however, the Shitalalkya River is now on the verge of an untimely death. Environmental degradation in the river water from untreated domestic and industrial effluent has reached such an alarming level that it poses a significant threat to public health, eco-system and economic growth of surrounding areas.

20-22 Interview

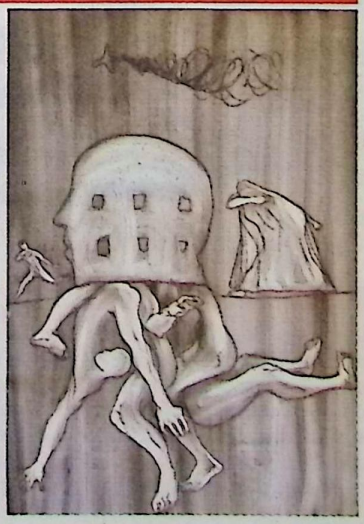

Changing the Face of Feminism

Journalist and writer Ammu Joseph has explored how the struggle for women to show that they are capable of doing as well as men have been changing over the years. She has interviewed 200 women journalists for her book 'Women in Journalism: Making News'. She speaks to The Star about what it means to be a woman journalist today.

Time out of Mind

There is a certain complexity to Mustafa Zaman's work, which separates him from his peers. At its worst it is a cerebral onslaught, at its best its satire turned inside out, but no matter what one says about it, his work elicits a critical response from all who stand in before it.
