

Ignoring the government plan as well as laws the river water is being degraded by the effluent flowing in from two directions: the outflow of sewage from the centre of Dhaka, and from the clusters of industries and urban development located along the outer edge of the watershed. The result is a thick layer of pitch black coloured effluent in the water throughout the dry season.