CRYSTAL INSURANCE

This week there was a lot of volatility in the international markets. The week started off with yen falling sharply against the dollar, and tested the psychological support at 100. Yen weakness was perpetuated by reports of Japan's first current deficit in 13 years. However on Thursday the yen rallied broadly, rising more than one percent against the dollar and euro, as Japanese investors repatriated funds and short-term speculators bought yen. Japanese investors typically bring home funds to window dress their books ahead of the end of the business year in March. The dollar fell as low as 95.79 yen; it's weakest in two weeks. It was last down 1.3 percent at 95.86 yen. The dollar's rally from a 13-year low in January lost steam as it approached 100 yen last week. Early in the week driven by a subsiding of risk aversion, and stock markets rising, the dollar fell against the majors. However the pound fell sharply on worries about the success of quantitative easing plans announced by the Bank of England. By the end of the week as equity markets weakened and the recent run in risk appetite lost steam, the dollar strengthened against the other currencies.
