AP, Mombasa

Somali pirates fired grenades and automatic weapons at an American freighter loaded with food aid but the ship managed to escape the attack and was heading yesterday to Kenya under US Navy escort, officials said.

In defiance of President Barack Obama's vow to halt their banditry, pirates have seized four vessels and over 75 hostages off the Horn of Africa since Sunday's dramatic rescue of an American freighter captain.

One pirate declared Wednesday they are grabbing more ships and hostages to prove they are not intimidated by Obama's pledge.

"Our latest hijackings are meant to show that no one can deter us from protecting our waters from the enemy because we believe in dying for our land," Omar Dahir Idle told The Associated Press by telephone from the Somali port of Harardhere.

The Liberty Sun's American crew was not injured in the latest attack but the vessel sustained some damage, owner Liberty Maritime Corp. said.

Still, the attack foiled the reunion between the American sea captain rescued by Navy snipers and the 19-man crew he had saved with his heroism.

Capt Richard Phillips was planning to meet his crew in the Kenyan port of Mombasa and fly home with them.

TIANANMEN ANNIVERSARY Police hold activist in China

AP, Beijing

A Chinese activist said he was detained by police yesterday, the start of the sensitive period marking the 20th anniversary of the Tiananmen Square pro-democracy movement.

Qi Zhiyong said police grabbed him in the morning just after he dropped his daughter off at school in Beijing. State security agents later arrived, confiscated his phone and drove him to the city's outskirts, where they held him in a police car all day, he said.

"They have just let me return home now," Qi said in a mobile text message later Wednesday to The Associated Press. "Police are stationed outside my door, I don't know how long they will be there for."

Qi, whose left leg was amputated after he was shot in the 1989 military crackdown on the demonstrators, has called on the communist government to break its silence and provide a full accounting of those killed and wounded in the assault.

Pakistan calls for access to 'terror plot' suspects in UK

AFP, Islamabad

Relatives of Pakistani students arrested in Britain over an alleged Al-Qaeda-driven plot pleaded their innocence and demanded access to their loved ones.

Twelve men, including 11 Pakistanis -- 10 of them on student visas -- and a Briton, were arrested in raids across northwest England last Wednesday. One man has been released without charge.

A five-day extension of their custody ended late yesterday.

"I am celebrating the 23rd birthday of my son today with a heavy heart, not knowing what might have happened to him," Nasrullah Khattak, a property dealer based in Pakistan's northeastern city of Peshawar, told AFP by telephone.

He said his son was a third-year student of information technology in Manchester and was guilty only of practicing Islam.

"I am really at a loss to understand what was his crime. Is he being punished for being a practising Muslim?" Families said neither the British nor the Pakistani government had provided any information, charging that news of their fate was leaked in the media.

"I am clueless about my son because neither the British government nor the Pakistani foreign office or interior ministry approached me so far. I need to see my son, I want to know how is he doing and if he is alright," said Khattak.

"I will fight for my son's release come what may," he added. The raids were carried out in daylight after Britain's top anti-terror police officer, assistant commissioner Bob Quick, was photographed carrying clearly legible details of the operation. He resigned over the blunder.

Doctor Akbar Ali, based in Dera Ismail Khan -- another city in the North West Frontier Province that has been scarred by Islamist violence -- said his nephew was studying business administration in Liverpool.

"We have no access. Nor is our government telling us anything. It is our media which keeps us posted," he told AFP by telephone.

Decades of close ties between the former colonial power and Pakistan have taken a battering over Islamist fundamentalism and militancy, with London saying most terror plots investigated in Britain have links to Pakistan.

Pakistan's high commissioner to Britain, who has flown to discuss the issue with the Islamabad government, said he was dissatisfied at not being granted consular access to the students.

Afghan Shiite Muslims shout during a demonstration in Kabul yesterday. Angry women parliamentarians and rights activists marched outside a Kabul university demanding "justice" and distributing a declaration that says the Shiite Personal Status Law "insults the dignity of women".

Angry Afghans protest new marriage law

AP, Kabul

A group of some 1,000 Afghans swarmed a demonstration of 300 women protesting against a new conservative marriage law yesterday. The women were pelted with small stones as police struggled to keep the two groups apart.

The law, passed last month, says a husband can demand sex with his wife every four days unless she is ill or would be harmed by intercourse a clause that critics say legalizes marital rape. It also regulates when and for what reasons a wife may leave her home alone.

Women's rights activists scheduled a protest Wednesday attended by mostly young women. But the group was swamped by counter-protesters both men and women who shouted down the women's chants.

Some picked up gravel and stones and threw them at the women, while others shouted "Death to the slaves of the Christians!" Female police held hands around the group to create a protective barrier.

The government of President Hamid Karzai has said the Shiite family law is being reviewed by the Justice Department and will not be implemented in its current form. Governments and rights groups around the world have condemned the legislation, and President Barack Obama has labeled it "abhorrent."

Though the law would apply only to the country's Shiites 10 to 20 percent of Afghanistan's 30 million people it has sparked an uproar by activists who say it marks a return to Taliban-style oppression. The Taliban, who ruled Afghanistan from 1996-2001, required women to wear all-covering burqas and banned them from leaving home without a male relative.

Shiite backers of the law say that foreigners are meddling in private Afghan affairs, and Wednesday's demonstrations brought some of the emotions surrounding the debate over the law to the surface.

"You are a dog! You are not a Shiite woman!" one man shouted to a young woman in a headscarf holding aloft a banner that said "We don't want Taliban law." The woman did not shout back at the man, but told him: "This is my land and my people."

Women protesting the law said many of their supporters had been blocked by men who refused to let them join the protest. Those who did make it shouted repeatedly that they were defending human rights by defending women's rights and that the law does not reflect the views of the Shiite community.

Iran makes offer to solve N Korea to restart nuke programme

AFP, Tehran

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad said yesterday Tehran will offer a new package to world powers for negotiations aimed at resolving the standoff over its controversial nuclear drive.

"We are preparing a new package which will be ready very soon," Ahmadinejad said in a speech in the southern province of Kerman, according to the official IRNA news agency.

The Fars news agency quoted Ahmadinejad as saying the package "will be presented to the P5-plus-1 group," referring to UN Security Council permanent members Britain, China, France, Russia and the United States plus Germany.

"Iran will hold discussions based on this new package which guarantees peace and justice in the world," Ahmadinejad was quoted as saying.

He said the package was a new version of one offered in May 2008, which Iran described as an all-embracing attempt to solve the world's problems, and which suggested setting up consortiums -- including one in Iran -- to enrich uranium and manufacture nuclear fuel.

The 2008 package was offered after global powers proposed economic incentives to help Iran's civilian nuclear programme in return for a halt to enrichment activities.

Uranium enrichment is a process which makes nuclear fuel as well as the core of an atom bomb, and the West fears Iran is secretly trying to build nuclear weapons -- a charge persistently denied by Tehran.

AFP, Seoul

An unrepentant North Korea yesterday hailed its rocket launch as a historic victory, a day after vowing to restart its nuclear weapons programme in response to UN censure of the exercise.

The communist North has ordered UN atomic inspectors to leave the Yongbyon complex, which produced weapons-grade plutonium until it was shut down under a six-nation nuclear disarmament deal.

Incensed by the Security Council's condemnation of its April 5 blast-off, Pyongyang pledged Tuesday never to rejoin six-party talks. It vowed to restore and reopen Yongbyon and to reprocess spent reactor fuel rods.

North Korea "informed IAEA inspectors in the Yongbyon facility that it is immediately ceasing all cooperation with the IAEA," said Marc Vidricaire, spokesman for the UN's International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

"It has requested the removal of all containment and surveillance equipment, following which IAEA inspectors will no longer be provided access to the facility," he said.

"The inspectors have also been asked to leave the DPRK (North Korea) at the earliest possible time."

The White House said Pyongyang was making a big mistake.

"We call on North Korea to cease its provocative threats and to respect the will of the international community and to honour its international commitments and obligations," said spokesman Robert Gibbs.

Thai people and foreigners play with water on Khao San road during the Songkran festival in Bangkok yesterday. Songkran is regarded as Thailand's traditional New Year. Thailand's fresh political dramas will inflict huge tourism losses, weigh down the stock market, and crimp growth in an economy already in crisis from the global downturn, analysts said.
