

PROTESTERS GATHER ON SURMA BANK

Thousands call to stop 'disastrous' Tipaimukh project

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Sylhet

Several thousand people yesterday joined a programme on the bank of Surma River in Sylhet city protesting the much talked Tipaimukh dam project on the upstream of Barak River in Indian state of Manipur.

The project will create a disastrous situation in 12 districts in the north-east region of Bangladesh and areas in Indian states of Assam and Manipur, speakers said at the programme organised by Angikar Bangladesh.

Calling upon the democratic and patriotic forces to raise voice against the looming crisis, they said there should be adequate awareness among our citizens about the Tipaimukh project.

Meanwhile there have been strong protests in three north-eastern states of India -- Manipur, Assam and Mizoram -- against the mega project that would threaten the existence of at least 40,000 aboriginals people and cause immense harm to ecology and environment in a large area.

Shahjalal University Teacher Dr Nazia Chowdhury, Sujon Sylhet chapter General Secretary Faruque Mahmud Chowdhury, Bapa

Sylhet chapter Secretary Abdul Karim Kim, Sylhet district Bar Association Vice-President Kishore Kumar Kar spoke at the rally.

"Implementation of the said project, mainly aimed at producing electricity, would cause a disastrous situation for the Meghna basin, especially the greater Sylhet region, during the dry season due to large-scale withdrawal of water of the Barak River in the upper stream. Also there are apprehensions of recurrent flooding during the monsoon due to possible release of water," a senior official in the Bangladesh Water Development Board said.

The Indian government is going ahead with the project even ignoring protests in Manipur state, he said, adding that it will be another Farakka for Bangladesh. The Barak River bifurcates as Surma and Kushiya while entering into Bangladesh territory.

People of greater Sylhet region started protesting the project since the news of approval of the project was published a few years ago.

However, the Indian officials claimed that the hydro-electric project in their territory will not cause any harm for the Sylhet region.

Father of slain Jubo League leader seeks justice after seven years

RU CORRESPONDENT

Father of a slain Jubo League leader, at a press conference held at Metropolitan Press Club in Rajshahi yesterday, demanded punishment of killers of his son murdered seven years ago.

Nader Ali, father of slain Waz Nabi Dulu, former assistant general secretary of Rajshahi Ward No 26 alleged that local BNP cadres killed his son on April 27, 2002. He alleged that Dulu was murdered because he had campaigned in favour of Nagorik Committee candidate Fazole Hossain Badsha during Rajshahi City Corporation (RCC) election.

BNP candidate Mizanur Rahman Minu won the election defeating Badsha following which BNP cadres tortured local Awami League leaders and activists in the ward, Nader disclosed, adding the cadres attacked his house and beat up his elder son.

Later, a meeting was held at Namobhodra Primary School playground in presence of local leaders on April 27 where an altercation ensued between BNP cadres and AL activists.

At one stage, BNP cadres stabbed his son with sharp weapons in front of other people, he said.

Dulu died on way to Rajshahi Medical College Hospital, he further stated.

As police refused to receive the case, Dulu's brother Habibur Rahman filed a case with chief metropolitan magistrate court accusing 14 BNP cadres, Nader said. But a BNP bigwig influenced the case and transferred its investigation officer (IO). Police also did not arrest any killer, he alleged.

Police later submitted charge sheet against one Azanur, but without proper investigation, he said.

The killers are now moving freely in the locality under the nose of police, he said demanding reinvestigation of the case.

Contacted, former RCC mayor Minu refuted all allegations.

Slain Jubo league leader's mother Golehar Begum, brother Rafiqul Islam and other relatives were also present at the press conference.

Health service too poor in Bandarban

31 working against 108 govt posts in district, upazila hospitals

MONIRUL ISLAM MONU, Bandarban

Acute shortage of doctors and technical staffs is seriously affecting health service in Bandarban hill district.

After the present government took over, district health department sent a report on the 'emergency situation' to the higher authorities but no step has been taken yet, said sources at Bandarban civil surgeon's office.

Only 31 medical officials are working in the district headquarters and upazila health complexes against 108 government posts, said sources at district health department.

Most of the people of remote areas have to depend on quacks, fake baidyas and unskilled pharmacists, said several public representatives of rural areas.

"Resident Medical Officer (RMO) is a very important post for a hospital. But the posts of RMO in the district, other than Bandarban Sadar Hospital, have remained vacant for a long time," said Dr Ching Swe Prue, medical officer of district civil surgeon's office.

"In absence of RMOs, regular indoor treatment and administrative works of hospitals and health complexes are seriously hampered," Dr Chingsaid.

"Under the pressure of the then government, the 50-bed Bandarban Sadar hospital was upgraded to 100-bed hospital in 2005. But extension of facilities as 100-bed hospital were stalled due to bureaucratic tangles during the last four years," said a government official seeking anonymity.

The Sadar hospital has been running without senior consultant for medicine, senior consultant for skin and viral disease, junior consultant for orthopaedics, junior consultant for cardiology and junior consultant for eye and emergency medical officer for a long time.

Besides, posts of dental surgeons have remained vacant at Ruma, Roanchhari, Thanchi, Lama, Alikadam and Naikkhonchhari upazila health complexes for long.

Against 23 posts of assistant surgeons, there are only two persons -- one at Alikadam Upazila Health Complex and the other at Baisari Union Health centre under Naikkhonchhari upazila.

As the posts of blood test technicians in Alikadam, Ruma, Roanchhari and Thanchi upazila hospitals have been vacant for 22 years, diagnosis of malaria and other viral diseases are hampered.

"Critically ill people have to be taken to upazila health complex on shoulders. But many have to return without proper treatment due to absence of medical officers," said Yang Rai Mro, an indigenous inhabitant of Remakri union under Thanchi upazila.

Cry for drinking water in over 100 remote Khagrachhari villages

JASIM MAJUMDER, Khagrachhari

At least two lakh people, most of them indigenous in over 100 remote villages under eight upazilas in the hill district, are suffering for want of drinking water. The crisis becomes acute in dry season as most water sources dry up.

According to the Khagrachhari Hill District Council (KHDC) and district public health officials, at least 20 villages in Dighinala upazila, 15 in Panchhari upazila, eight in Sadar upazila, 18 in Mohalchhari upazila, 25 in Matiranga upazila, 17 in Laxmichhari upazila and 25 villages in Ramgour upazila are facing the nagging problem.

Most indigenous villages are situated in remote areas of the district. This correspondent visited several upazilas to witness water crisis. It was found that the villagers are still totally dependent on natural sources. They collect water from water bodies like river, 'chhara', canal, spring, pond etc. As a result, many of them frequently suffer from water-borne diseases like diarrhoea and jaundice. But no government or non-governmental organisation has extended any water and sanitation facilities yet to the people in remote hills of Khagrachhari.

A recent survey made by local organisation Paribesh Andolon Forum said, achieving water and sanitation target for all by 2010 in CHT would remain a far cry as long as all concerned do not come up with strategic actions.

The report, published recently, also suggested a new action plan and integrated approach to resolve the problems.

Mohammad Abul Bashar, assistant teacher of Matiranga Pilot School told The Daily Star that some 1,000 people in his Muslimpara area have been suffering for lack of drinking water. They collect water from nearby villages. "It's become very difficult to live in the village," he said.

Pointing to Tk 50 lakh water development project implemented by Chittagong Hill Tracts Development Board, he said it only fattened pockets of some BNP leaders while the problems remained mostly unresolved. He also criticised NGOs as they do not take pain to know the real situation.

Milon Tripura, a poor indigenous man from Semana para under Sadar upazila said there is no tubewell in his village. "Neither government nor NGOs come to solve our water crisis," he alleged.

Sona Ratan Chakma of Sadona Tilla under Dighinala upazila informed that there are no water sources except for some Zeeree or Chhara (hill springs), which turn dry in winter. "Now the people are suffering extremely for water, he said.

Kamal Chakma from Kamalchhari village said they are facing water crisis as the river is drying up for siltation. "But no initiative is taken to excavate or dredge the river," he alleged.

Sub Assistant Agriculture Officer of Matiranga Upazila AEO Mohammad Amzad Hossain told The Daily Star that around 1,000 acres of land remain uncultivated while at least 25 villages of upazila are suffering for scanty drinking water.

Executive Engineer of District Public Health, Mohammad Sohrab Hossain admitted the crisis and said remoteness, lack of technology, poor integrated approach have added to the situation.

"Besides, there are many areas where the authorities cannot set up tubewell just because of armed criminal groups. They often demand ransoms for development work. That's why sometimes we cannot do anything in spite of all good intention to ensure water facilities in remote areas of Khagrachhari," he said.

Deputy Commissioner AKM Khairul Alam said he has sent a proposal to the ministry concerned to resolve water crisis in the remote villages.

Khagrachhari Hill District Council (KHDC) Chairman Ruhity Karbari observed that all relevant sectors including government and non-governmental organisations should work in unison. "Then it would be possible to achieve total water and sanitation coverage," he said.
