

Activists from radical Sikh organizations hold placards displaying images of the 1984 damage to the shrine Sri Akal Takht Sahib and portraits of Sikh leader Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale at Sri Akal Takht at the Golden Temple in Amritsar. The gathering marked the 25th anniversary of Operation Bluestar, the assault on the Golden Temple complex by the Indian army in 1984 to arrest Sikh leader Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale and his militant followers who had initiated a movement for a separate Sikh state, a move linked to the eventual assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi

Swiss Roger Federer poses with his trophy during a photocall front of the Eiffel Tower in Paris, one day after winning against Swedish player Robin Soderling during their French Open tennis men's final match at Roland Garros Stadium in Paris. Federer won his 14th major with victory over Robin Soderling in the French Open final. It was the Swiss star's first Roland Garros title and helped him become only the sixth man to complete a career Grand Slam.

As star guest of the commemorations, Obama is to deliver a speech before 9,000 people including 200 US D-Day veterans at a clifftop graveyard in northern France which has become a symbol of America's sacrifice for Europe's freedom

A picture shows a Spanish UN peacekeeper patrolling along a dirt road near the divided village of Ghajar, on the Lebanese border with the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights. Ghajar, on the northwestern edge of the Golan, fell under Israeli control after the Jewish state seized the strategic plateau, the Sinai, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and east Jerusalem in the 1967 Six-Day War. Golan, including part of Ghajar, was annexed in 1981 in a move never recognised by the international community.
