Atia Islam Anne Images of women objectified

TAKIR HOSSAIN

Violence against women is a scourge of our times. What can explain this phenomenon? The long subjugation of women and their relegation to the position of sex objects or reproductive and domestic machines in a male dominated society. Thankfully the tide is turning now thanks to socially concerned artists, writers and poets.

One such talented painter, Atia Islam Anne, has used her unmistakable artistic skills to delineate these and other social issues. Her telling works are on display at a solo exhibition, titled "Inauspicious Time," currently running at the Bengal Gallery of Fine Arts, Dhanmondi.

Anne's paintings articulate her personal observations, experiences, understanding and deep observations on the anomalies in our society -- particularly when it comes to what is now termed the second sex by feminists.

Anne's canvas focuses on women's regrets, needs, despair and frustration. Her works are crowded with protesting and tormented figures that demonstrate the common and unfortunate features of life. She deals with a variety of subjects in addition to women -- the BDR military corruption, misplaced idealism and religious bigotry.

Artworks by Atia Islam Anne

The artist's works are surrealistic and have a touch of fantasy. Raw colours, diagonal lines and distorted figures are the prime hall-mark of her works. All of Anne's works are tinged with irony and humour. Large areas are painted over with vibrant greens, yellows, red and blue and have a kaleidoscopic appearance. In her works the subject prevails over the medium or technique. Acrylic is dominant in her works. Her images in colour convey the message of inner struggle and she skilfully uses the canvas as a powerful medium of expression.

The exhibition ends on June 23.

Nari O Nakkhatra on Sufia Kamal's birth anniversary

CULTURAL CORRESPONDENT

To mark the birth anniversary of poet Sufia Kamal, a special episode of the talk show "Nari O Nakkhatra," based on issues related to women, will be aired on Rtv tonight at 7pm.

Sultana Kamal, noted human rights activist and daughter of poet Sufia Kamal, and president of Bangladesh Mahila Parishad Ayesha Khanam are the guests on tonight's show. The guests will discuss on the life and works of Sufia Kamal. Pragna Laboni is the host and Rawshan Ara Nipa is the producer of the programme.
