Journalism today

Journalism as a profession has acquired a broader dimension today. The skill-sets are no longer specific and the importance of digital media cannot be ignored any more. A holistic training is becoming imperative to equip students to meet the myriad demands of the industry. Above all, students are taught how to write well. We aim to deliver skills such as communicating ideas, problem-solving, team work, creativity and innovation, ability to work under pressure and, flexibility and multi-tasking. Students have to learn to write well, to communicate clearly, work well in teams, work to deadlines and learn how to be persuasive to get interviews, among other things. This is the duty of our generation as we enter the twenty-first century -- solidarity with the weak, the persecuted, the lonely, the sick, and those in despair. It is expressed by the desire to give a noble and humanizing meaning to a community in which all members will define themselves not by their own identity but by that of others.

Drug industry

Our pharmaceutical sector is one of the developed and hi-tech sectors, which is contributing to our national economy. After the promulgation of The Drug Control Ordinance 1982, the development of this sector was accelerated. At present there are 222 licensed pharmaceutical companies; but now 164 of them are in operation in Bangladesh. Now Bangladesh is exporting medicines to more than 180 countries around the world. In the last fiscal year, the export of medicines was worth around BDT 300 crores.

The deaths of 25 children after taking paracetamol syrup point to the utter disregard by the Drug Administration for public health. Once again The Rid company scandal in Bangladesh has revealed the total lack of quality control mechanism of the Drug Administration for essential drugs. There is a rule that the drug superintendents and drug inspectors are supposed to visit the market from time to time and collect samples randomly for testing in the laboratory. But they did not do so, resulting in such deaths. Moreover, there are only 24 drug superintendents and inspectors at field level to collect samples. Besides there is shortage of drug testing laboratories in the country.

The main reason for this scandal is undue profiteering through using low cost but poisonous ingredients for making paracetamol suspension. It is worrying to learn that a harmful element has also been found in vitamin capsule and syrup. So, now people will generally get worried to take medicines even with leading brands. It will ultimately reduce demand for medicine products at home and abroad which will result in sluggishness in the pharmaceutical sector. It also proves that our business ethics and morality are gradually falling only for monetary gains. For this reason the business persons are now paying more attention on profit maximization through whatever means available to them whether it is ethical or not. Though business ethics and morality are being taught in the leading business schools at home and abroad to the business students, but they often forget it when they become businessmen because of facing the reality that influences them to be unethical and corrupt. One of my course teachers once defined business "as a process of getting out money from the customers' pockets at any cost." Although it does not sound good, but now it's the reality that most businesspersons follow.

Finally, I don't want to see deaths of innocent children any more through intake of poisonous medicines produced by a section of unethical businessmen. So, I appeal to the government to probe this scandal because it is the most sensitive sector relating to the life and death of a human being. Otherwise, our medicine exports to foreign countries would be badly hit.

Jewellery shops

During my last visit to Dhaka in March, exactly on 23rd March 2009, I found myself in a Jewellery shop by chance selling gold and diamond articles in a Gulshan shopping enclave.

A very nice shop it was indeed and owned by a very decent merchant from Gujarat. I could have never imagined that there existed such a posh jewellery shop in Dhaka. I have never seen such a shop anywhere in Europe, for that matter. Gold and diamond on display in that shop would be worth hundreds and thousands of dollars. And there were about two dozen such shops around and I learnt that all were owned and managed by merchants from Gujarat, India. Still I cannot figure out how they bring such expensive goods to Bangladesh and then again how can they transfer their sales money and profit back to India?

Fact or fiction?

A detailed article, written by a professor of Khulna University, published in "The Financial Express" on July 26, gives some very interesting points about the Tipaimukh dam and BNP's hue and cry about it. In the professor's opinion it is all a political sham, engineered by the leader of the opposition to regain political ground shattered by her party's total defeat in the last election!

The professor states that the Tipaimukh dam is a hydro-electric project, similar to our Kaptai Dam; and similarly it will have no negative impact downstream in Bangladesh. He also positively states that the project proposal was given to Bangladesh back in 1997 when the dam was proposed by India, and when the BNP was in the government; and they raised no objection about this now "vile" decision taken by India!

Further, he states that the matter was raised in the 35th and 36th meetings of the Joint River Commission, held in 2003 and 2005 respectively; when again the BNP government was in power! Then too no objections were raised. Why now this about face?

Technically, the dam will create a reservoir upstream, and all the upstream water, coming in, will flow down the dam through the turbine or the spillway. No water will be retained anywhere, unless it is diverted elsewhere upstream in India. If this is not done, then there will be no loss of water flow volume downstream through Bangladesh.

She is now "Making hay, while the sun shines"! But she must not forget there is another potent proverb which says: "Truth shall prevail"! The interesting article is worth reading. It makes one wonder if the opposition leader is dwelling on facts or fiction about the Tipaimukh dam. Interested readers may read the article and give their views upon it.

Education

There are around nine hundred students in the commerce faculty of Dhaka University, while there are about three thousand and a half in the arts faculty.

The seat capacity in the same university is about a hundred in each subject like Urdu, Percy Language and Literature and Sanskrit. For Philosophy it is 200 and Political Science 250 while in Mathematics it is 150.

Better planning is necessary to impart need-based education.

Laudable remarks

In his remark, Syed Ashrafur Islam, Awami League General Secretary, very clearly mentioned what his party wants to come up with the proposal to end the nasty political culture. He even offers to the opposition party to turn the proposal into deed in which the nation can experience such a political culture where corruption, extortion, murders, pilferage, anarchy can no longer exist. The bottom line of the persuasive, but still logical, remark rests on three observations:

First, the political quagmire in which the whole nation has been bogged down since the liberation period is getting

Spirit of Ramadan

STAR

Ramadan is the month of self-restraint. If we go by the spirit of Ramadan and teachings of Islam, then consumption of food items should go down. As a result, demand for food items should also go down and in that case dwindling demand would automatically force the prices down. As a matter of fact, this should be the situation in the Muslim majority countries during Ramadan. But the opposite is seen everywhere. The spirit of Ramadan and the teachings of Islam being taken out of the context year after year, consumption of food goes up. So much so that for the last few years successive governments in Bangladesh are facing the challenge of their existence during Ramadan over the prices of food items! It got worse when the print and electronic media jumped into the bandwagon.

DS should come forward to lead the change of tone on this front. Instead of pressurizing the govt to tackle the prices of food items during Ramadan, you should appeal to the conscience of God-fearing Muslims reminding them of the true spirit of Ramadan and the teachings of Islam for this holy month. Consume less to be able to empathize with the fellow Muslims who have less to consume!

worse. The present administration is taking some concrete steps to get it back to life. And the remarks made by the LGRD minister reveal how seriously they think about the challenge. In response to the question of all party participation, he made it clear that political parties always are in the same knot until they work for the national interest. However, if anyone wants to create obstructions on the path to the trial of war criminals and matters directly related to the well being of the country, then, of course, the nation will not retreat. And a Bangladeshi, if history tells correctly, possesses the courage to do so.

Second, on the question of morality and ethical standards, the leader clearly asserts that we are the nation of ideals. Though some people practice earning black money and illegal wealth, it is not the whole picture of the nation. And the government takes action in light of how to put an end to the malpractice, not by punishing the group owning illegal wealth, but by giving them the chance to correct themselves, thinking about the well being of the whole nation. It is, too, good to hear that, according to him, the way Sheikh Hasina and he were elected party president and general secretary uncontested cannot be called completely democratic. However, in future, the party will think about open vote in which party councillors enjoy direct voting. By this, the party ushers in practicing accountability and transparency. That's a welcome step.

Finally, on the issue of 1/11, and its post experiences, the leader wholeheartedly admitted that politicians' nonchalance and shortsightedness brought the nation to the edge of the destructive situation in which the nation might have lost democracy. Even while commenting on the single most important issue of the trial of the killers of Bangabandhu and four great leaders, the leader declared that "if the killings are not resolved permanently, division within the country cannot be resolved permanently."

And many of us, myself included, believe that we really got the enthusiastic administration that, like the nation, believes in real change of political culture.

Bring them to justice

A parliamentary standing committee expressed its deep concern that some political people of the government party were involved in crimes like tender hijacking in many places in the country.

Now it is the duty of the government to bring the hijackers to justice and thus make parliament effective.
