

'Bangabandhu makes constitution unique'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Rajshahi

Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman made the country's constitution a unique one in the world by giving a new definition of secularism, said Shahrir Kabir, a noted journalist, in Rajshahi yesterday.

"For him secularism did not mean abandonment of religion, but a separation of religion from state and politics," said Kabir, president of Ekatturer Ghatak Dalal Nirmul Committee, a forum for secular Bangladesh and trial of war criminals.

He said Bangabandhu was a religious man and he believed in people's freedom of religion.

Bangabandhu gave new definition of secularism to end Pakistani tradition of abusing religion for political gain, said Kabir.

He said in the name of protecting Islam, Pakistani rulers and Jamaat-e-Islami men killed people, raped women and committed genocides during their 23-year regime and the liberation war.

Kabir was addressing as chief guest at a discussion meeting organised on the occasion of the National Mourning Day at the Kazi Nazrul Islam auditorium of Rajshahi University (RU).

RU Vice Chancellor Prof M Abdus Sobhan chaired the discussion.

Speakers at a discussion here, on the occasion of the National Mourning Day, yesterday recalled the supreme sacrifice made by Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman for the cause of Bangladesh.

He said with the death of Sheikh Mujib, "we lost a great leader and a great friend."

Dubey said that Mujib was a great world leader, who had tremendous love for his people. He quoted Bangabandhu as saying, "I love my people and they also love me."

Recalling a public meeting that was addressed by Bangabandhu in the early seventies, the former diplomat-turned teacher said, I had never seen such a huge public meeting in my life."

Ved Marwah recalled his journey with Bangabandhu from Heathrow Airport to Dhaka via New Delhi and said when Sheikh Mujib came to know I knew some Bangla, he asked me to seat next to him and spoke about his vision on newborn Bangladesh he was yet to see.

Maj Gen (retd) Jacob, 1971-war veteran, former Indian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Prof Muchkund Dubey, Shashi Bhushan, a former Member of Parliament, Dr Nitish Sengupta, a former MP, Arjun Sengupta, a retired officer, who served in the Indian High Commission in Dhaka in the early seventies and Ved Marwah, who had accompanied Bangabandhu, following his release from Pakistan's captivity, from London to Dhaka, spoke on the occasion.

General Jacob described Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib as a "great leader of a great nation." He said that Bangabandhu had directed his people to fight against the occupation army if required.

"As the Pakistani forces unleashed attacks on unarmed people of East Pakistan on March 25, the people remembered the directives of their great leader and waged a war against them," he added.

Sengupta, also worked at the office of Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi for four years, said that Sheikh Mujib had tremendous love for his people and he laid down his life for the country. He regretted that all "our great leaders were brought down by the barrels of guns."

Bangladesh High Commissioner Tariq Ahmad Karim in his speech paid rich tributes to the memory of Bangabandhu and said, "Without his appearance there would have been no Bangladesh." He said that what Mahatma Gandhi was for India, Nelson Mandela for the South African people, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib was for Bangladesh. He said the brutal killing of Bangabandhu was a "shameful black spot in our history."

Karim said that subsequent political killings or attempt of killing could be averted if the killers of Bangabandhu were tried and punished. Rather they were given lucrative postings abroad, he added.

A government handout adds: Bangladesh High Commission in Pakistan observed the National Mourning Day on its premises yesterday.

On the occasion, discussion and milad mahfil were held. A documentary titled 'Chiranjib Bangabandhu' was also screened.
