

Suicide bomber kills 12 at mosque in Iraq

AP, Baghdad

A suicide bomber yesterday opened fire on worshippers during prayers at a mosque in northern Iraq and then blew himself up after running out of ammunition, killing 12 people, police and hospital officials said.

The attacker walked into the Sunni mosque in Tal Afar and started firing on worshippers with an AK-47 rifle as the imam was delivering his sermon, a local police official said. Sixty-five people were wounded in the attack. When the shooter ran out of ammunition, he detonated his explosives belt, the official said.

The imam, Abdul-Satar Hassan, a member of Iraq's largest Sunni political party, was also killed in the attack, the official said. It was not immediately clear if the slain imam was the intended victim, although Sunni clerics have increasingly become targets in Iraq's sectarian bloodletting.

Sahir Jalal, 37, who was at the mosque for prayers, said the imam had just begun delivering a sermon when a tall man stood up.

"Then he took out a small rifle from under his jacket and started to shoot," he said.

Seconds later, the man shouted "God is Great" and detonated explosives strapped to his body, Jalal said.

An official with the Tal Afar hospital confirmed the casualty count. Both officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorised to release the information to the media.

Last week, a Sunni cleric driving home after delivering a sermon in Saqlawiyah, 75 km northwest of Baghdad, was killed by a bomb attached to his car. Earlier this week, the cleric who leads the biggest Sunni mosque in Baghdad was wounded in a similar bombing.

A Sunni cleric in Mosul was killed in September, also by a bomb attached to his car.

Tal Afar is about 60 km northwest of Mosul. While violence in Iraq has dropped dramatically since the height of the insurgency, the area in and around Mosul is considered one of the last strongholds of the Sunni-backed insurgency and the scene of some horrific bombings recently.

Tal Afar, a mostly Turkoman city, is located along one of the major smuggling routes from Syria to Mosul and has gone through cycles of stability and instability for years. The Sunni majority at one time had an alliance with the Shia police to battle Sunni insurgents and their allies.

Recent attacks have mainly targeted ethnic minorities, possibly indicating insurgents are seeking out vulnerable, relatively unprotected targets to maximise casualties as the strapped Iraqi army focuses its efforts on more central areas of the country.

DESTINATION DEATH al-Qaeda bus found in Iraq

AFP, Abu Ghraib

The bombers had done their work well, and the bus found at a farm west of Baghdad appeared quite normal. But this one had been modified by al-Qaeda to transport death.

The Abu Ghraib farmstead, 20 kilometres (12 miles) from the Iraqi capital, had been abandoned by its Shiite owners amid the wave of sectarian violence that swept through the country in 2006 and 2007.

That was when Sunni insurgents from al-Qaeda moved in and set up their bomb factory, by all appearances a professional operation in which attention to detail was paramount.

When Iraqi security forces swooped down on the farm, they uncovered everything the bombers required to transform the ordinary into the horrific.

In addition to explosives everywhere they found electrical wiring, portable telephones, and batteries -- everyday items that could, in the wrong hands, wreak havoc.

4 Americans killed in Afghan bombing

AP, Kabul

Four US service members were killed by a bomb blast, with two killed instantly and two later dying of their wounds Thursday, the US said in a statement. No further details were released.

The deaths bring to 25 the number of American service members killed in Afghanistan this month, according to an Associated Press count.

A UN-backed panel has completed most of its investigation into whether the level of fraud in Afghanistan's presidential election will require a runoff, a spokeswoman said yesterday as the US military announced the killing of four more American troops.

Afghanistan's ambassador to the United States says he expects a second round vote will be required.

Rising death tolls and the political crisis brought on by a fraud-marred election have prompted President Barack Obama's administration to review its entire Afghanistan strategy. The White House is considering various options, including a sharp increase in the number of US troops here or shifting the focus to missile strikes and special operations raids against al-Qaeda members hiding in neighbouring Pakistan.

Global warming threatens Canada

AFP, Ottawa

Canadian rivers are at risk from a variety of environmental challenges, including global warming, expanding agriculture, the construction of hydro-electric dams and increased urban consumption of water, a study said Thursday. Although Canada holds the world's largest freshwater reserves in thousands of lakes and rivers, this could quickly change as demands for water increase exponentially, warned the authors of the World Wildlife Fund report.

The WWF examined 10 Canadian rivers and found some of them are "dangerously close to drying up."

It also outlined three main threats: changing precipitation patterns due to global warming, causing drought, flooding and the melting of glaciers; growing demand for water by cities for agriculture and industries; and increased demand for low CO2-emitting hydroelectricity, which could alter river flows and damage ecosystems.

"The combined threats of climate change and growing demand for fresh water by cities, agriculture and industry are converging on Canada's rivers," Tony Maas, WWF Canada director of fresh water, said in a statement.

"Even seemingly remote northern waters like the Mackenzie (river) are at risk. As temperatures rise, and industrial water withdrawals and interest in hydropower increase, we must start planning now to protect river flows to ensure water security for the communities and economies that depend on them."

UN endorses Gaza report Israel urged to shun it

AFP, Geneva

The UN Human Rights Council on yesterday adopted a resolution that endorses a damning report accusing both Israel and Hamas of war crimes during the Gaza conflict.

With 25 states of the council voting for the resolution, six voting against and 11 abstaining, the "draft resolution ... is therefore adopted," said president of the Human Rights Council Alex Van Meeuwen.

The resolution calls for the endorsement of "the recommendations contained in the report" produced by a team led by international war crimes prosecutor Richard Goldstone, which looked into a 22-day conflict ending in January that Israel launched in response to rocket fire from Gaza.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has urged the UN Human Rights Council to reject on Friday a report accusing the Jewish state and Islamist Palestinian group Hamas of war crimes in the Gaza conflict.

"Responsible nations have to vote against this decision that supports terror and harms peace," Netanyahu told reporters late on Thursday after a meeting with visiting Spanish Prime Minister Jose

Luis Rodriguez Zapatero.

The special session on the human rights situation in the Palestinian territories and is to decide whether to endorse the report from the team led by former international war crimes prosecutor Richard Goldstone.

The probe said both Israel and Hamas, Gaza's rulers, committed war crimes and possible crimes against humanity during a 22-day conflict over the new year that Israel launched in response to rocket fire from the coastal enclave.

The conflict left 1,400 Palestinians and 13 Israelis dead.

Turkey insists Israel to end Gaza 'tragedy'

AFP, Ankara

Turkey urged Israel yesterday to end the "humanitarian tragedy" in Gaza, saying ties between the two allies cannot recover if Palestinian suffering continues and peace talks remain dead in the Middle East.

"Ending the humanitarian tragedy in Gaza, reviving peace efforts -- both on the Palestinian and Syrian track, and most importantly -- reinstating a prevailing spirit of peace in the region... this is what we want," Foreign Minister Ahmet Davutoglu told reporters.

"When there is a return to the track of peace, these relations of trust (with Israel) will be re-established on the same level as before," he said.

Israel's ties with its chief regional ally took a sharp downturn last week when Ankara excluded the Jewish state from annual joint military exercises, prompting a rebuke from the United States.

The row flared Thursday as Israel summoned the Turkish envoy to protest a Turkish state television series which it condemned as "inciting hatred against Israel" and "not worthy of being broadcast even in an enemystate."
