At the inaugural session, the speakers pointed out that Mymensingh Press Club has taken the lead in the sphere of journalism in Mymensingh region for the last 50 years. Mymensingh, they added, is one of the oldest districts of the country and courageous journalists from the district have faced numerous obstacles along the way. # French New Wave pioneer Eric Rohmer passes away

Eric Rohmer, who directed such art-house classics as "Claire's Knee" and "Love in the Afternoon," has died, according to news reports. He was 89. Rohmer died on the morning of January 11, 2010. The cause of his death is unknown. He had been admitted to hospital the previous week. Rohmer was one of a group of filmmakers, including Francois Truffaut and Jean-Luc Godard, who created what came to be called "La Nouvelle Vague," the New Wave, French films dominated by jump cuts, hand-held cameras, and a love for Hollywood genres such as film noir. Rohmer -- who was born Maurice Henri Joseph Scherer -- Truffaut and Godard all wrote for Cahiers du Cinema, the publication that became their manifesto. But while Godard's films embraced the experimental -- sometimes to the point of antagonising the audience -- and Truffaut's showed a love for old Hollywood styles, Rohmer's were often about relationships between small casts of characters, men and women trying to cope with sexual temptation, sometimes with dryly comic results. The filmmaker was beloved by colleagues for his youthful attitude and warm friendships. Rohmer's other films included "My Night at Maud's," "Pauline at the Beach" and "The Duke and the Lady."
