Where Three Dreams Cross

Exhibition of images from India, Pakistan and Bangladesh in London

Historic and contemporary photographers of Bangladesh, India and Pakistan come together in a landmark exhibition that explores culture and identity. "Where Three Dreams Cross" is a major survey of photography from the subcontinent, with over 400 works by 82 photographers, being held at the Whitechapel Gallery in London, UK. The exhibition was inaugurated yesterday (January 21), says a press release.

From the archives of Drik, photos by legendary Bangladeshi photographers such as Golam Kasem Daddy, Sayeda Khanom, Amanul Huq, Nasir Ali Mamun and Rashid Talukder are on display alongside their contemporary counterparts, including Abir Abdulah, Munem Wasif, Momena Jalil and Shumon Ahmed. Dr. Shahidul Alam, founder and managing director of Drik, is also exhibiting and was one of the curators who brought the show together. Images on display range from the earliest days of photography in 1860 to the present day. Seminal works from the most important collections of historic photography, including the renowned Alkazi Collection in Delhi, the Drik Archive in Dhaka, the Abhishek Poddar Collection in Bangalore, and the White Star Archive in Karachi join many previously unseen images from private family archives, galleries, individuals and works by leading contemporary artists.

"Where Three Dreams Cross" gives an inside view of photography from India, Pakistan and Bangladesh. It includes images from the first Indian-run photographic studios in the 19th century, social realism and reportage photography from the 1940s, the documentation of key political moments, amateur photography from the 1960s, and street photography from the 1970s. Contemporary documentary-style photographs of everyday life present an economic and social critique, while the recent digitalisation of photography accelerates crossovers with fashion, film and documentary.

The exhibition will continue at Whitechapel Gallery till April 11 and will also travel to the Fotomuseum Winterthur, Switzerland (from June 11 to August 22, 2010).
