HUNDRED YEARS OF WAIT

WOMEN, still deprived after eras of cultural, social and religious modernisation, want to speak out against social menaces, which come in the way of their social security, economic empowerment and free movement. The observance of the 100th International Women's Day reminds us of our failure to give even a secure shelter, let alone a good honourable life, to them. Time is mocking at us and puts a question before us whether we will move forward to see their co-existence with the other half of the society in the next 100 years. The choice is ours. The photo in the middle shows an acid-crime victim at a rally organised on the occasion of women's day at the Central Shaheed Minar yesterday.
