UK ELECTION 2010

Battle for votes enter last 72 hours

BBC ONLINE

Labour, the Conservatives and Lib Dems are into the final three days of election campaigning as polls suggest the result is still in the balance.

The Tories are ahead in the polls but not by enough to get a majority - David Cameron says they will campaign through the night in a final push from Tuesday.

But Labour said the Tories "blew" their lead early on and have not won it back.

Gordon Brown, Mr Cameron and Nick Clegg are spending the bank holiday hitting keyseatstheyhopetowinon6May. Three days before the closest election since 1992, an ICM/Guardian poll puts the Conservatives on 33%, Labour and the Lib Dems on 28% while a YouGov poll for the Sun puts the Tories on 34%, Lib Dems on 29% and Labour on 28% - which continue to point to a hung parliament. 'VITALTIME'

BBC News Channel chief political correspondent Laura Kuenssberg said despite the final TV debate and Mr Brown having to apologise after being overheard calling a pensioner "bigoted", the polls had not really shifted over the past week.

said there was not "one ounce of complacency" in his campaign and pledged a try," he said. through-the-night campaign from Tuesday night to Wednesday night, in which he is expected to meet fishermen, bakers and florists who work in the early hours of the morning.

He said he was taking "no vote for granted" and recognised that millions of people were still making up their minds.

In a message to his parliamentary candidates he said: "This is the vital time. You need to go door to door, street to street, house to house. We have a huge amount of work to do, a lot of people left to convince."

Mr Cameron said the Tory message would be "simple and clear": "That we are stuck where we are at the moment, we do In Blackpool on Monday, Mr Cameron notwant more and more of Gordon Brown."

"We can win it and win it for our coun-

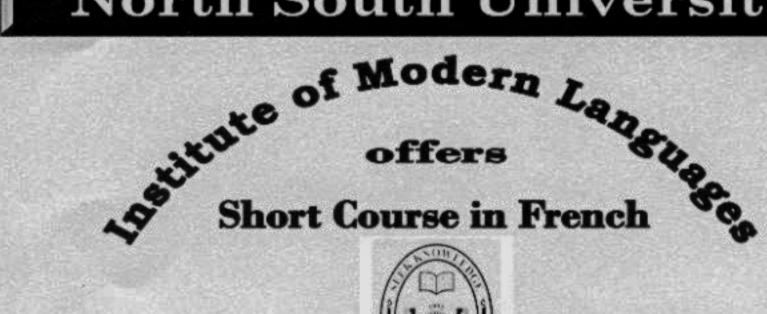

On Sunday he said his party had the "momentum" - and was criticised by Labour's Lord Mandelson who said Mr Cameron was "desperate to give the impression that he is home and dry" but in fact voters were "firmly resisting his soft soap campaign".

First tribute to Serb war victims in Sarajevo

AFP, Sarajevo

A heavy police presence yesterday surrounded the first ceremony allowed in Sarajevo to mourn Serb soldiers killed at the start of the 1992-95 Bosnian War, which left deep scars in the city.

Security forces stopped everyone getting close to the dozens of members of Serb groups and relatives of the dead soldiers who laid white roses in the street where a Yugoslav army convoy was attacked as it pulled out of the city in 1992.

The withdrawal marked the start of the 44-month siege of Sarajevo in which about 10,000 people died. Many in the Bosnian capital have never forgiven the Serbs.

The ceremony went off without incident, according to police, though it was preceded by a demonstration by Bosnian Muslims. And the city's mayor Alija Behmen had wanted the event banned as a "provocation" by Bosnian Serbs.

The organisers had originally wanted to march along the street where the Yugoslav convoy was attacked by Bosnian government.

"They killed our children and no one has been held accountable," said Bogdana Tomovic, whose 18-year-old son was one of the soldiers killed, as quoted by the FENA news agency.

"We demand justice for the crimes committed against soldiers who were peacefully withdrawing from Sarajevo," she said, adding that her son "was killed in a treacherous way".

Flood in US state kills 15

AP, Nashville

Opryland's 1,500 guests were spending the night in a high school to escape rising floodwaters that threatened other areas of downtown hit by devastating thunderstorms that slammed Tennessee and northern Mississippi, killing at least 15 people.

Authorities in Tennessee were preparing for more deaths and for the Cumberland River, which winds through the Music City, to crest at 10 feet above flood stage before sunrise, putting portions of downtown in danger of the kind of damage experienced by thousands of residents whose homes were swamped by flash floods.

The Cumberland River had already reached record levels since an early 1960s flood control project was put in place. With so much water inundating the Cumberland's tributaries, however, it was difficult to gauge whether the river would stop at 50 feet or exceed the forecast, increasing the water's spread in the city.

Authorities weren't taking any chances. They evacuated the downtown area and north Nashville where a leaky levee threatened residents and businesses. Flooding could hit the downtown tourism industry, the train depot and near LP Field, where the Tennessee Titans play.

"It's a lot like weather forecasting in that it's not exact," National Weather Service meteorologist Darrell Massie said of the prediction. "There's a lot of science behind it, but we still have to accept a certain amount of error."

Forecasters were on the money when they warned residents there would be severe weather across the Mid-South, but few could have predicted the devastation the relentless line of storms brought.
