their Bangla Book, through clay work and drawing. A whole wall is painted with the work of Rabindranath and Nazrul as well as their biographies and photos. On the other hand the Department of English made an enjoyable staging of Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. Sunshine Art Department arranged an art exhibition of totally different genre. Here, students used different media to represent the theme of this year's end of session festival fun and frolic.

While the whole campus was vibrating with fun, in the Multimedia room, some enthusiasts enjoyed presentation on astronomy, business plan, biodiversity and many other graphic presentations in pin drop silence. During this daylong festival, not a single moment was spared without activity. Whenever any one got a little tired walking on the aisles of stalls and listening to the explanation of complex scientific theories went to the auditorium and indulged in soothing music. As we are in the months of the birth anniversaries of Rabindranath Tagore and Kazi Nazrul Islam, the activities of the cultural show pivoted around them.

Apart from these a huge food court was another attraction of the 'fun and frolic' that provided cuisines in a number of variety traditional, indigenous, Moglai, Chinese, continental, fresh fruit juice whenever any visitor got hungry or thirsty made a brief stop at our gourmet art department and left with a happy smile.

This fun and frolic celebration of Sunshine Grammar School and College drew a huge crowd. Despite the unbearable May heat, people did show up at the Sunshine Campus from dawn to dusk and enjoyed every bit of it.

Lights! Camera! Action! My Reaction!

Alongside the hero should also be deft at attacking the villain.

Choosing proper actresses are something I really stress on. While the selection process involves fulfillment of several criterion that I do not wish to divulge, I have narrowed down the search to Katrina Kaif, and Kareena Kapoor with Angelina Jolie to play the role of the mother. During my potato crisp munching research I had also noticed that the audience (in this case, me) seem to be very favorable towards elaborate song and dance routines that are more directed towards the visuals of the skin. In my movie, all the songs will follow this notion while performing the trendiest dance moves - such as "the chicken" and "the robot".

Any modern movie director must have ample knowledge on the magic of special effects. And, needless to say, I am one truly enlightened in such arts. So far my craft includes putting moustaches on people's faces on Microsoft Paint, and turning photographs into black and white. Yet, a project as audacious as mine deserves something superior; therefore for this movie I shall download a freeware editing software which shall be operated by the one and only this guy I met once!

I love action movies, so everyone in the world must love it too. My movie is embellished with breath-taking action sequences such as cars jumping over fire, people jumping over buildings, cow jumping over moon and fat lady jumping over puddle to name a few. Despite what many Hollywood directors suggest I am not paying so much money for a stuntman. They are way too expensive, and you don't even get to show their faces on screen (talk about money down the drain). Real live monkeys will thus conduct all the stunts in my movie. The idea had hit me the last time I visited the zoo, these primates are much more agile and nimble than human beings - and can be trained to perform the most difficult stunts. Besides they are expendable (did I say that out loud?) and they literally work for peanuts.

Last but not least, a movie requires a special appearance from someone special to help it become an absolute success. While actors like Johnny Depp or Shahrukh Khan would be the obvious choice to create hype, my personal choice is much more far-fetched. Therefore, the only person suitable for a cameo role in my movie is definitely none but... And, that reminds me I still haven't finished dreaming up his dance sequence at the beach. Besides, I have to put shutters on my windows for all the nosy paparazzi who would soon be disturbing me.
