

Indian school children pay tribute to the victims of the train disaster at Sardiha some 135 kilometres west of Kolkata, at a school in Amritsar yesterday. Rescue workers recovered more bodies in their search for victims from the wrecked train, with fears that the final death toll could exceed 150.

INDIAN TRAIN ACCIDENT

Death toll mounts in Maoist sabotage

AFP, Sardiha

Indian rescue workers recovered more bodies yesterday in their gruesome search for victims of a train wreck blamed on Maoist saboteurs, with fears that the final death toll could exceed 150.

More than 30 hours after a Mumbai-bound high-speed passenger train from Kolkata careened off the tracks in a remote part of West Bengal, emergency teams were still trying to cut their way into sections of the mangled wreckage.

"The death toll has now reached 120," Srikumar Mukherjee, West Bengal civil defence minister told AFP, after more bodies were pulled from the worst affected section of the train.

The badly crushed carriage was yet to be fully searched and some 40 passengers were still unaccounted for as rescuers suspended operations for the day due to heavy rains, said Mukherjee.

It was the deadliest Maoist attack in recent memory and is likely to ramp up pressure on the government, which has already been severely criticised for its handling of the left-wing insurgency.

The precise cause of the derailment in the early hours of Friday morning was still unclear.

Railways Minister Mamata Banerjee said Maoists had blown up the track with explosives, while police pointed to evidence that a section of rail had been manually removed.

Senior police officials on Friday had laid the blame squarely at the feet of the rebels, saying several Maoist leaflets had been left at the site of the disaster.

But Indian Home Secretary GK Pillai suggested there was still room for inquiry. "It's likely to be them (Maoists). There is no one else in the area. But we are still checking," Pillai told AFP.

The incident occurred at around 1:30 am in West Midnapore -- a Maoist stronghold around 135 kilometres (85 miles) west of Kolkata.

The Indian Railways Board responded by cancelling night time services in a number of Maoist-affected areas until further notice.

Thirteen carriages, most of them packed with sleeping passengers, jumped the tracks and most of the casualties were in the four that collided with an oncoming goods train.

Some of the bodies had been torn apart by the force of the impact and identification would only be possible through DNA testing, said West Bengal police inspector general Surajit Kar Purakayastha.

More than 200 people were injured, some of them critically.

US Army reviewing options for strike on Pakistan

ANI, Washington

The US Army is studying options for a 'unilateral strike' in Pakistan, in case a successful terror strike on America is traced back to the semi-autonomous tribal regions of that country, top military officials have disclosed.

Officials said that the alleged links between the confessed Times Square bomber Faisal Shahzad and the terror groups operating from the lawless tribal regions, particularly the Taliban, have 'sharpened' the Obama administration's need for retaliatory options.

"Planning has been reinvigorated in the wake of Times Square," The Washington Post quoted one of the officials, privy to the development, as saying.

It may be noted that President Obama sent his two top security advisors - National Security Adviser James Jones, and the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) Director Leon Panetta to Islamabad earlier this month, who reportedly told both the civilian and the military leadership of that country that it must go against extremists flourishing on country's soil with more force.

US officials said that there is a broad consensus amidst the country's military establishment that airstrikes would be the best option to erode the threat posed by al-Qaeda and its affiliates.

Clashes in Kashmir over civilians' killing

AFP, Srinagar

Police in Indian Kashmir fired teargas yesterday to disperse thousands of villagers protesting against what they said was the staged killing of three Muslims by the security forces.

Late last month, the military said it had foiled an infiltration bid by killing three militants along the de facto border that divides Kashmir between South Asian rivals India and Pakistan.

But three families in the northern district of Baramulla said the slain men were "innocent" relatives who had gone missing three days before.

On Friday, authorities ordered a probe into the incident and also exhumed the three bodies, which were found to be those of the missing men.

Thousands of villagers Saturday took to the streets of the men's home village in Baramulla, chanting: "We want freedom" and "Hang the killers."

Police fired teargas shells and baton-charged the demonstrators. Eyewitnesses said 14 people were hurt in the clashes.

"We had to use force as they wanted to block the main highway," one police officer said.

The Indian army has ordered an internal inquiry into the killings.

An insurgency against Indian rule has left more than 47,000 people dead in Kashmir since 1989.

Baton-wielding police charge a funeral procession for three civilians in response to stone-throwing protesters in Rafiabab in Indian Kashmir yesterday. They fired teargas to disperse thousands of villagers protesting against what they said was the staged killing of three Muslims by the security forces.
