Oil lower

Oil prices were directionless on Monday with the market still worried about poorer-than-expected US employment figures and the dollar strong, analysts said.

At 1000 GMT, London's Brent North Sea crude was up 28 cents to 72.37 dollars, compared to Friday's closing price.

The dollar's strength was underlined when the euro briefly plunged to 1.1876 dollars in Asian trade on Monday, its lowest level for more than four years, although it rallied in early London trading.

Eurozone open on new rules as markets reel

Eurozone governments prepared on Monday to fix terms on bumper emergency loans and new cross-border budget sanctions, just as fresh anxiety about debt in eastern European hit stocks and the euro.

World stocks and the euro plummeted amid worries that Hungary's public finances face a Greece-style meltdown, after a leading government figure said the country was in a "state comparable to that of Greece" and that "the bankruptcy of the state is close."

"The Hungarian deficit alarm has brought credit markets back to square one," ING Credit said in a note. Tokyo stocks dived 3.8 percent and European markets all suffered sharp falls on opening.

Meanwhile, the euro crumbled to 1.1876 dollars on one stage -- its lowest since March 2006 -- before recovering to 1.1924 in Asian afternoon trade, still down from 1.1967 in New York on Friday.

According to Luxembourg Prime Minister Jean-Claude Juncker, who chairs the forum of euro finance ministers, agreement on how to underwrite guarantees running to 440 billion euros has been reached, overcoming German resistance to collective solidarity.
