'Textbook incorrectly describes Agartala Case'

BSS, Dhaka

Deputy Speaker Shawkat Ali yesterday said the background of the historic Agartala case was "incorrectly" described in the school textbooks.

He urged the education ministry to take steps for its correction.

"Two textbooks for class 9 and 10 carried a nearly identical description of the case from which it appears that the Agartala case was merely a political event related to Bangabandhu's historic six-point movement," he told BSS on the sidelines of a discussion on the historic event.

Shawkat added: "But as a matter of fact, several military officers and civil servants were involved in the case as we wanted to liberate the country from Pakistan through an armed revolution under the leadership of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman" which was not directly linked to the six-point.

He added that as part of the plan called as "the Agartala Plot" navy steward Mujibur Rahman and educationist Mohammad Ali Reza went to Agartala to seek the Indian support for Bangladesh's independence.

"Agartala case was not related to the six-point movement... had it been so the accused like ours -- the military and civil government officials -- would not have the scope to get involved, though we had wholehearted support for it," said Shawkat who was a captain of Pakistan army at that time and was arrested to face the trial.

Earlier, speaking at the discussion organised by Oitihashik Agartala Mamla Mulyayan Parishad, the deputy speaker urged the textbook board authorities to evaluate equally bullet-wounded flight sergeant Fazlul Haque along with martyred flight sergeant Zahirul Haque.

The Pakistani troops shot them simultaneously as they awaited trial in military custody in Dhaka cantonment.

The Agartala Case, popularly called Agartala Conspiracy Case, which had set a new course in the history of the country's independence struggle, was filed in early 1968 implicating Bangabandhu and 34 other Bengali civil servants and army, navy and air force officers and politicians for hatching a "plot".

Budget draws mixed reactions

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Leaders of different political, social and professional organisations yesterday expressed mixed reactions to the national budget announced on Thursday.

In a statement, Comrade Khalekuzzaman, president of the Bangladesh Samajtantrik Dal (BSD), said the budget will accelerate discrimination between the rich and poor and expand corruption because of weakness in administration and unaccountability of the people's representatives.

There was no reflection of taking initiative to develop the lifestyle of working-class people and expand market, he said.

The BSD chief strongly criticised the government for reducing agriculture subsidies.

Leaders of the Bangladesh National Awami Party (NAP) said the budget would stand against people's interest because of reducing subsidies for the agriculture sector and increasing expenditure on defence sector.

Meanwhile, President of the Jatiya Kar Ainjibi Samity

Barrister Akmal Hossain greeted the government, and said if the budget is implemented, the country's development will be accelerated.

Cultural organisation Bangabandhu Sangskritik Jote brought out a procession and held a rally in the city to express greetings to the prime minister and the finance minister for announcing a "people-oriented" budget.

Addressing the rally, the jote leaders said the budget would play a vital role in reducing poverty and flourishing industry of the country.
