Medvedev to visit Obama in Washington

REUTERS, Washington

President Barack Obama and his Russian counterpart Dmitry Medvedev will seek to kick start trade and investment yesterday to complement a political reset between the former Cold War foes.

Medvedev, who started his US visit with a tour of Silicon Valley high-technology companies, will hold talks with Obama and then meet US business leaders to pitch Russia as a swiftly expanding economy where investors are welcome. Medvedev's visit to California's high-tech cradle reflected his drive to reduce Russia's dependence on natural resource industries by encouraging innovation and a pro-business mind-set.

the country's first woman prime minister yesterday in a bloodless plot hatched by right-wing party powerbrokers worried by predecessor Kevin Rudd's slump in opinion polls.

Once stratospherically popular, Rudd's profile dived in recent months after a series of policy missteps and a damaging fight with the high-profile mining industry over a proposed 40 percent tax on their profits.

"The first and major risk is not to do with her, but to do with the impact this has on perceptions of the Labor party," said Rodney Smith, an election expert mining tax. from the University of Sydney.

"You've got a party that's clearly lost confidence in the direction that it's been pursuing, the leader that took them to the last election. That's got to raise serious questions about whether Labor should be elected next time around."

Opposition leader Tony Abbott said the electorate would not be impressed by Rudd's "ugly assassination" by his own party, condemning it as the mafia-style thuggery of "factional warlords".

"She'll have a freshness about her, she'll have a honeymoon period and that's probably going to be good," Warhurst told AFP.

"She's got the advantage of having been in the public eye for a long while as deputy prime minister, but she'll also have the advantage of a short sharp sprint to the (election) and I think that's a plus."

Gillard, once Abbott's weekly sparring partner on breakfast television, could also prove a more formidable foe than her predecessor, Warhurst added.

Obama's ratings fall amid Gulf oil spill

Reveals survey

REUTERS, Washington

President Barack Obama's job performance rating has dropped to the lowest level of his presidency as Americans grow less confident in his leadership, according to an opinion poll published on Wednesday.

Obama's rating stood at 45 percent in the Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll, down 5 points from early last month. For the first time in the survey, more people -- 48 percent -- say they disapprove of Obama's job performance. A majority of respondents, 62 percent, said the country was on the wrong track.

Forty-nine percent of those surveyed rate Obama positively on "strong leadership qualities," down from 70 percent when he became president and a drop of 8 points since January.

The poll also showed growing concern over the BP oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico and slipping confidence in Obama's handling of the environmental disaster that has shut down rich fishing grounds and soiled the coastlines of four US states.

In the two months since the spill started, Obama has made four visits to the Gulf and pressured BP to agree to a $20 billion account to help pay for relief.

Half the poll respondents said they disapprove of Obama's handling of the spill, including one in four Democrats. Forty percent of respondents rate him positively on his "ability to handle a crisis," was down 11 points since convoy of Gaza-bound aid ships killed nine pro-Palestinian activists, including eight Turkish citizens and one US citizen of Turkish descent, sparking an international outcry.
