A chronicle of Lalon disciple Duddu Shah

Bard's final resting place in shambles

Duddu Shah's grave at Beltala village, in Jhenidah is in a sorry state.

AZIBOR RAHMAN, Jhenidah

Rural bard Duddu Shah was one of the disciples closest to Lalon. It is believed that Duddu Shah became Lalon's disciple after the latter defeated him at a debate on philosophy at Cheuria, in Kushtia.

Duddu Shah was born as Dabir Uddin in 1841 (in Bengali-1248) at Beltala village, under Harinakundo upazila, in Jhenidah. His father's name was Jharu Mondol.

His father got him enrolled at the local pathshala (school). He attained significant knowledge in Quran, Hadith and other religious books. He learnt Arabic, Sanskrit and French.

At the age of 30, he left home to acquire further education. He traveled to Nabodwip, Nadia and Jessore. Later, he reached Kushtia, where he came across Lalon. After becoming Lalon's disciple, he stayed with the bard till his death. At Lalon's akhra (den), he was given the name 'Dud-Malik Shah.' People called him 'Duddu.'

Lalon Shah admired Duddu for his meritorious nature. It is believed that Duddu Shah memorised the whole "Chaitanya Charitamrita" by heart. Lalon was moved by Duddu's humility and scholarly ways. Lalon came to know that Duddu had left his wife and children, and advised him to go back home.

Duddu Shah composed around 200 spiritual songs. He wrote two books "Lalon Charit" and "Noor-E-Mohammadi." The bard breathed his last in 1911 and was buried at his village Beltala.

Sekander Ali of Beltala village gave away two and half decimal land for the memorial of Duddu Shah.

Duddu Shah's final resting place, however, is in a tragic shape now.

Daud Hossain, an elderly local, said that every year in the Bangla month of Falgun, a fair was held in the area in honour of Duddu Shah. The event drew thousands. Hossain said that the authorities should take necessary steps to renovate the bard's grave and build a memorial here.

Movement of the human figure in focus

Dhaka Art Centre's drawing exhibition

A CORRESPONDENT

A few weeks ago, Dhaka Art Centre (DAC) organised a workshop on drawing, which was attended by sixty painters. The workshop was conducted by veteran painters of the country. Currently, the gallery is holding an exhibition featuring selected drawings from the workshop.

The works focus on movements of the human form. Participating painters have tried to highlight different parts of the body. Their modes of expression are different in terms of themes, compositions and forms but lines are predominant aspects in most of the works. The workshop was experiment-based, as the participating painters were engrossed with lines and tones from different perspectives and angles.

The exhibition was inaugurated by Bangladeshi expatriate painter Shahabuddin Ahmed on July 6 at the centre. Secretary to the Ministry of Prof. Matlub Ali, Dean, Faculty of Fine Arts, University of Dhaka, speaks at the inauguration.

Foreign Affairs Mizarul Kayes and Professor Matlub Ali, Dean, Faculty of Fine Arts, University of Dhaka, were present as special guests. A number of noted painters and trustees of the DAC also attended at the inauguration. The exhibition ends on July 15.

Office politics and crush on colleagues

Tele-film "Call Centre" on Channel i today

A scene from the tele-film.

A CORRESPONDENT

Tele-film "Call Centre" will be aired on Channel i at 2:30 pm today. Written by Lincoln De Costa, the tele-film has been directed by Partha Sarkar.

Sumon, Mona, Tapu and Ramisa work at a call centre. Masud is the chief executive of the eight-member team. Sumon feels insecure, as he is a bit obese. He likes Mona but cannot express his feelings. He is also eccentric. He sometimes talks while sleeping. Mona is a jokester and always makes fun of Sumon. Tapu is a sycophant and is always trying to impress Masud. Masud, on the other hand, seeks advice from Tapu regarding dating. Office politics and infatuation make for an interesting setting.

The cast includes Sumon Patwary, Mehezabien, Hillol, Ramisa and Shahidul Islam Sachchu.

Lindsay Lohan's career not over yet

A Beverly Hills judge clearly has seen enough of the Lindsay Lohan downward spiral, sentencing the starlet to 90 days in jail last Tuesday for violating her probation stemming from a drunken driving arrest.

But has Hollywood seen enough? Will Lohan, once she's done serving a sentence scheduled to begin on July 20, ever work again?

The answer is probably yes. This is the film business, after all. It's easy to forget that a decade ago, "Iron Man" megastar Robert Downey Jr. was sitting in jail on drug charges, and as late as 2003 he was in a substance abuse treatment facility. At the time, many believed Downey would have a hard time ever finding work because nobody would insure his films (Hollywood productions require elaborate insurance policies in case something goes wrong and the film can't be finished; something like, say, an actor going to jail on drug charges).

Like all insurance, the cost of the policy is determined by the risks, which, for Downey and now Lohan, shoot sky high once jail time becomes a reality.

Still, "it's probably not the last straw for Lohan," says Douglas Turk, executive VP for Aon/Albert G. Ruben, an entertainment insurance broker. "Anything is insurable. It's just a question of price."

So how much? Depends on the production, but experts say rates for troublesome actors can run from 1 to 3 percent or more of a film's budget. That might not seem like a lot but with budgets being squeezed like never before, Lohan's latest act-out could be a fine reason to consider another worthy actress instead. At least one filmmaker, Matthew Wilder, who is set to direct Lohan in the Linda Lovelace biopic "Inferno," says he is "100 percent behind Lindsay" and "we are proud to have this remarkable artiste work on our film." But the sentencing probably means the cost of casting Lohan in Wilder's movie just went up.

Whether producers will still be interested in Lohan if it means ponying up extra cash is an open question.

Talent is talent, of course, and Lohan's performances in films like "Freaky Friday," "The Parent Trap" and "Mean Girls" suggest the sentencing likely won't prevent her from getting insurance under the right circumstances.

"There are ways to get around the risk," Turk says.

A policy, for instance, could outline various exclusions that would put producers or even Lohan herself on the hook should she end up in the slammer again. Sometimes stars are even asked to deposit their salaries into escrow in case they cause trouble on the set. After a few problem-free hit movies, legal issues would likely be forgotten, as would many of the precautions.

After all, Downey was once deemed uninsurable and now he's Iron Man. How long until Lohan would make a great Wonder Woman?
