Mother Teresa as seen through Raghu Rai's lens

She radiated a certain power and energy that you could almost touch. She never fluctuated as a human being; whether she was meeting a prime minister or beggar. She was compassionate, yet very strong. She had a spiritual energy which never dimmed.

KAVITA, New Delhi

Mother Teresa: At prayer, tenderly cradling a baby, with leprosy sufferers, the destitute, the aged and dying. These unforgettable images were captured by India's iconic photographer Raghu Rai from the 1970s till the Mother's death in 1997. To commemorate the 100th birth anniversary of Mother Teresa, 40 of Rai's black and white photos were on display in New Delhi recently.

Says Rai nostalgically, "I was like the Mother's spoilt son." Understandable from a photographer who was allowed to click the many facets of the otherwise reclusive Mother and her commune. And once he had begun to shoot, he couldn't put his camera down. As he points out, "Each time I went to her, it was like I almost had to establish to myself why I was back to her."

The Mother's magnetic personality drew him on. "She was a definite inspiration for me. She radiated a certain power and energy that you could almost touch. She never fluctuated as a human being; whether she was meeting a prime minister or beggar. She was compassionate, yet very strong. She had a spiritual energy which never dimmed."

Apparently, one of Rai's editors discovered the then unknown Mother Teresa in the 1970s. Rai landed in her office and ever since began to take photographs of "The Living Saint".

The Mother clearly proved more than a mere subject for the avid photographer.

Venice film festival kicks off with "Black Swan"

AFP, Venice

US director Darren Aronofsky raised the curtain at the Venice Film Festival Wednesday with his psychological thriller "Black Swan".

Aronofsky, who won top honours here in 2008 with "The Wrestler" starring Mickey Rourke, turns his sights on the cutthroat New York ballet world in the new contender for the prestigious Golden Lion.

A total of 24 films are in competition this year, with the late addition of "Essential Killing" by Polish director Jerzy Skolimowski, about a member of the Taliban captured by Americans and transferred to Europe for interrogation.

Conspicuous by his absence Wednesday was prominent Iranian filmmaker Jafar Panahi, who has been unable to travel to Venice for the screening of his short film "The Accordion".

Authorities have refused to return Panahi's passport, revoked nine months ago. He was jailed for three months after being arrested in March while shooting a film about the aftermath of Iran's disputed June 2009 polls.

Panahi's "The Circle" criticising the treatment of women in Iran won the Golden Lion here in 2000.

This year Venice will screen 79 full-length world premieres from 34 countries including a work from the Dominican Republic for the first time, about its neighbour Haiti.

Quentin Tarantino heads the jury, which will also include fellow directors Arnaud Desplechin of France, Guillermo Arriaga of Mexico and Italian Gabriele Salvatores.

They will choose winners for the Golden Lion for best film, Volpi Cups for best actor and actress, and a special jury prize, among other awards.

It is the 67th edition of the Mostra, which began in 1932 in the lagoon city and now has a budget of 12 million euros (15.7 million dollars), including seven million from the Italian government.

Amitabh harassed by fan on his blog; files complaint

Amitabh Bachchan was probably the first most sincere celebrity blogger in Bollywood who used the platform to connect with his fans and update them on his activities, thoughts and interact with them regularly. No wonder then that he had innumerable followers who would start their day with reading what the revered Bachchan had to say.

But apparently there was one errant follower who used the ability to comment on the blog to vent out his negativity. He would leave derogatory remarks that would cross the line of decency and were abusive. Bachchan mentions in his blog, "There is a serious effort by a member that writes and comments on this blog to use language and expression that is abusive, filthy and utterly disgusting." The unrelenting person would even send messages that were downright vulgar on Bachchan's phone and provoked the star to take corrective measures.

Amitabh Bachchan reported the matter to the authorities and now any attempt from this miscreant would come under legal cyber space action.
