either too pre-occupied in running from one classroom to another or burying their heads in engineering books to achieve scholastic excellence that they seldom get time to involve themselves in shopping - let alone hunting for clothes! But this does not keep them away from being aware of what's new this season!

In conversation with some of the girls from BUET, I got to know that they often end up buying clothes from places like Deshi Dosh or Aarong and if they do get the scope to make dresses (shalwar kameez), they opt for light coloured cotton materials, like sky blue, pink, light green or plain white. Some also expressed their preference towards wearing dark colour shalwars paired with light coloured kameezes. To accessorise themselves, most girls wear small ear-tops and bangles. For footwear, a majority of these female students prefer wearing flat sandals, like flip-flops, for convenience and comfort. Most of them avoid wearing stilettos with a small minority being the exception.

Few of the girls also wear fatuas and jeans but they often match it up with richly coloured silk or cotton scarves with a wide assortment of patterning done delicately with sequences and laces. Occasionally some of the female students also wear saris. For the fall season, they prefer wearing bright coloured cotton saris. Some also like wearing Italian crepe, silk and georgette.

Although, women in general, like wearing make-up, students of BUET, spoke about this issue
