

sort through the trends and classics. Unlike western nations, fall in Bangladesh is nothing about layering and with the recent changes in weather people love to stick to light day wear as they let the sun bake them through out the day. Most students vote for 'comfort' in their list of priorities when it comes to choosing a material for this season. Natural fibres like cotton, which breathe, better is a top choice for both men and women. Light weight silk in the case of the ladies are also very popular as they blend in well with the tropical climate. Pinstripes or horizontal stripes in shirts and t-shirts for boys can be considered as the maximum style. Checks however appeals to both the gender and the classic combination of checks and casual-style jeans impart a lot of mode.

Young women are particularly picky about their accessories, for instance, bags. "We stay in class all day, so we need a serious bag that is good looking," says Adiba from BRAC University in Dhaka. Suede and leather naturally comes to their mind when that 'serious bag' that can also be good looking has to be chosen. The shades for the bags are everything from earthy browns to warm reds. For some students it is important that they lean towards logos and brands and fall for them might as well be the season to show some status. Large bags are a fashion statement and the carrier's frame really doesn't have to match the size of the bag.

Hair is an essential part of styling. Fall trends endorse lengths like below the shoulders and occasionally above the neck. Voluminous styles are always welcome paired with a neat make up. Naturally styled straight hair, mermaid curls and in the case of a few, short bobs work equally as success. Somehow men are moving towards fringes these days. The best style for many is to let it grow long on the sides. Deliberately messy hairstyles among young men give out the impression of rakish youthfulness.
