New technology and the nature of crimes
Md. Mokhlesur Rahman

At no time can it be gainsaid that criminality, in certain ways, pervades densely the process of social construction. It appears very natural that a thinking, meditative mind, in deciding the nature of propellants for social progression, may keep on laboring under a misconception, attributing the driving force of society to muscle-power syndromes with which the miscreants are identical. There is no denying the fact that the factors, underlying gradual social development from one state to another, and technological expansion, involve covetousness, suzerainty, over lordship and dominance over the other, irresistible cravings for others' kingdom or territory, an all-devouring desire to snatch away wealth from the possession of other people, and so on. Bloodshed appears to have gained momentum in hastening the spread of civilization. Warmongering injects into the constituent parts of human spirit the craziness about the invention of new technology. The more new technology develops, the more labyrinthine turn human criminal behavior appears to take on. Consequently, the technology-laden crimes replace the conventional ways of violating laws.

Certain it is that social progression influences the growth of individuals incalculably and by a large magnitude. The comfortable aspect of human life is, in all likelihood, inseparable from the contributions of science. But the technology-driven influx of comfort into our life is far from cropping up in a natural and stable way. As a consequence of the technology—oozing out of the womb of Western society—the upbringing of Westerners takes place in the environment in an adjustable way.

But the intrusion of technology into our lives, along with programs for economic development has come up with a devastating outcome. Things, that don't gush out of indigenous culture, give birth to a war between the Eastern and Western modes of behaving, plaguing and contaminating human situations in the context of our social life. The thrill of new technology keeps bubbling up in every sphere of social life. Based on the outmoded, mixed standards of education, our conservative society can neither absorb the technology from the West nor stick to Eastern stagnant culture. Ultimately, the multitude of the country, in interacting with new technology, appear with bizarre social behavior in an inadaptable and inassimilable way, and their activities lead to the commission of several crimes of outlandish type.

Our eyes are caught by the blazing spectacle of change in the country's infrastructure. What is ascribable to social development that we claim to have boosted at our disposal includes metalled roads with a level surface—winding in the remote rural areas—, electric lights—glowing in the far-off cottages—, the rapid yet unplanned urbanization, workable transportation system, skyscrapers, flyovers and so on. As a consequence of technological innovation, a sea-change has taken place in the modes of living we get habituated to. Lost in the lap of luxury, we couldn't protect even our kids from moral deviation. For example, we can refer to Eve Teasing that has appeared in the form of a monster. Using electronic games, one kid keeps slaying another. Letting our eyes roam around enthusiastically, we notice the spread of pornography, VCD, mobile phone, and so on. The technologically affluent culture from the West, has caused a shake-out in the ideological straightjacket of our cultural entity. And the products, yielded from the technology, keep on encroaching upon the circumscribed boundary of our lives in an unadjustable way every moment.

Human criminal behavior, far from the conventional means of contravening laws, has extracted the device from technology to let all get exposed surprisingly to its so peculiar a position in the era of technological change. The use of mobile phone exemplifies the matter substantially and in a clean-cut way. It appears as if it were a little monkey in the hand.

What is not there! Its application involves making and receiving calls, exchanging messages, enjoying music, extracting erotic pleasures from pornographic illustrations, having access to the Internet, and so on. It serves as the food of soul for the teen-agers during night. Call-charges at a discount by the mobile phone company can make it possible for them to be an earner of a great deal of benefit. The reason might be attributed to the fact that young people, like the nocturnal creatures, remaining awake throughout the whole course of night, get busy conversing with each other by means of this technology. And as such they fritter away their time and energy, getting addicted to sex and sexuality. The use of this technology in such a nasty manner in a backward, conservative, society, is something like the commission of crimes being disguised under the veil of sainthood. Staying inside a prison, a notorious convict can form a crime syndicate by means of a cellular phone. The fact that a criminal kept in a jail, can let extortion occur using a mobile phone, is certainly a form of transnational crime. For the people of Bangladesh, it is no longer new, drifting into the country's crime zone.

With the expansion of the most sophisticated machines, devices and methods, corporate crimes are increasing in number in urban areas. A person or group gets involved with the activity of finding out the military, political, or industrial secrets of their enemies or rivals by using spies. Industrial espionage is one of the identical features of modern life. So the crimes encompassing acts of spying, killing, deception, intimidation, violence and so forth, represent the image of white-collar criminals. In comparison to the urban crime scene, mainly dominated by the perpetrators of corporate crimes, the image of countryside gets crowded with grabbers of rivers, marshes and croplands.

Many a kid of the country, fondly, yet in a sluggish manner, stays indoors, getting habituated to a sedentary life-style in the midst of a narrow, homely family-circle. The way countless boys as well as girls of the middle and upper station of life, sluggardize themselves, getting entangled in inactivity and fruitless pleasures, exemplifies the matter. Stuck in the domestic surroundings, they spend time inside any multistoried building, mating with indoor Multichannel Television, Video Games, MP-3 Player, Internet, Facebook, Twitter, Wireless Telephone and so on. And as such they become divorced from outdoor games and activities without letting their physical parts stretch beyond the orbit of an indoor, homely life. What becomes an unshunnable part of their routinized activities, involves mental intercourse with Multicultural Soap Operas, Pornography, friendship with unknown persons, acts of blackmailing the fiancées by sending out pictures in the Internet, and so on. And their consciousness comes to be impregnated with guilty feelings.

In order to have adjustment to the trends of the new era blindly and irrationally, they have given up the ethical aspects of learning, and there occurs a decline in parental authority.

What is distinctive and striking about the rootless boys and girls, dwelling in the slum areas? Their link, with the dark network of criminal organizations, leads them to perpetrate unwholesome activities as well as committing heinous crimes including killing, hijacking, drug-smuggling and so forth. Some of them are low-paid laborers, prostitutes and scavengers. They miniaturize the future gangsters.

Garments industry, besides strengthening the national economy, has emerged as the country's biggest currency earner. What is prospectively true about the labor-intensive garments industry is that it has brought about a consolidation of the country's labor-force by furnishing the migrated people from rural areas with ample scope for work. It is certainly a blessing for the female workers, helping them grow into a state of self-dependence by providing them with employment. This blooming sector is never expected to have lapsed into a state of anarchy, disorder and confusion, yet a chaotic situation prevailed in several garments factories undesirably and against the run of the people's expectation.

What is the cause? Exposed to exploitation by a few owners of garments industry, workers seethed with discontentment. Their hot confrontation with those owners over the issues of wage, led to a tense situation in the area of work. Some parasitical leaders of workers, taking advantage of the matter, let the law and order situation suffer a huge setback in the sector. Consequently, the incidents of fire, damage, sabotage befall the national life, placing the socio-economic system in jeopardy of coming to a grinding halt. So there emerges a new official organization called the Industrial Police.

Transnational crime transcends national boundaries. It concerns more than one nation. Terrorists who commit such crimes carry a large-scale, mischievous, operational plan from one country or territory to another. With the completion of their mission in a particular country, they emigrate to another one where they play havoc with human race in the same merciless way. Unable to assimilate into the mainstream population in a region, they become identified. Finally, they are sheltered by the terrorist organizations, backed by the fundamentalists. The donkey agency of the fundamentalists lends voluminous financial assistance to the construction of Madrashes in the name of building a centre of spirituality. The irony lies in the fact that such religious institutions are, in fact, turned into the breeding centre of terrorists. Using the up-to-date technology, human-beings invented missiles and other man-killing devices. So the demolition of World Trade Center down to the ground occurred within a moment. The new technology created the global crises, instigating one nation against another, one country against another, one territory against another.

In the age of globalization, based on a well-organized structure, crime syndicates have got a strong foothold all over the world. Of the organized crimes, human trafficking is not circumscribed to one or two countries. Bonded labor, the separation of several organs from human body, and atrocities against women earned nearly 45 billion dollars annually. Every year an estimated nearly 21 million people from 127 countries fall victim to trafficking. Over 240 million children aged about, 5 to 17, fall victim to bonded labor. From time to time, the recruitment of such children involves making them serve as child soldiers, camel jockeys and prostitutes. They are also used in drug-smuggling and in the production of pornography. Addition to illicit drugs is expanding all over the world day after day. The statistical data of 2003 reveal that narcotics valued at nearly 322 billion US dollars were traded. The unlawful trade that is in all likelihood detrimental to the survival of human race, covers nearly 1% of global trade.

The expansion of the market in forged money takes its origin from the development of technology. Computer programs, color printers and high quality photocopyers have facilitated the task of making banknotes. The preventive measures against forgery, involve a huge investment in making holograms, multicolored notes and embedding strips in the notes. Ink that is used in the making of notes may change colors at different angles. There goes a saying that 3 fake notes are available out of every 10,000 US dollars.

Money laundering lets human situation take on a complicated turn. The transaction of nearly 1.5 trillion US dollars, illegally obtained, takes place every year in such a way that the identity or illegality of the source, the illegality of the transfer and the identity or criminality of people remains undetected. The crime leads to transnational bribery, sex trade, human trafficking, arms-smuggling, forgery and so on. Credit Card involves another sophisticated way of encouraging financial theft. The transfer of someone's money, deposited into an online savings account, to that of someone else, exemplifies, in the best possible way, the act of stealing.

Various chemical substances are improperly used by the market profiteers in a hundred different ways. Formalin is used to cause the ripening of unripened fruits. Certain chemicals are used to fatten up cows. It stands within the prospect of human judgment that only profit—however unethical or unjust—is the best thing in life under the economic system of free enterprise. A wave of profiteering and crime causes the undermining of human commitment to traditional values. In a true sense, human qualms behavior has faded into nothingness.

Even a few decades back, human beings couldn't think of something like cyber crime. There appeared before humankind a computer hacker who tries to break into computer system, especially in order to get secret or confidential information that is stored there. It goes difficult to secure a password for data protection. So the formation of cyber police across the globe is urgently needed to trace out cyber criminals. The necessity of taking the matter into consideration has also dawned upon the policy-makers of Bangladesh.

The extent to which, we get ready with alertness, watchfulness, and preparedness for the overwhelming task of combating unknown crimes, will determine and pin-point the nature of future social stability and order. The task of deciding, with accuracy, types of social crises; plus an adjustment to proper and well-designed use of new technology, will prove effective in countering the negative by-products that come into being under the social progression system. Equipped with proper training, skill and expertise, if the Bangladesh Police move forward, they can certainly pave the way for the acceleration of social development.

Transnational crime transcends national boundaries. It concerns more than one nation. Terrorists who commit such crimes carry a large-scale, mischievous, operational plan from one country or territory to another. With the completion of their mission in a particular country, they emigrate to another one where they play havoc with human race in the same merciless way. Unable to assimilate into the mainstream population in a region, they become identified. Finally, they are sheltered by the terrorist organizations, backed by the fundamentalists. The donkey agency of the fundamentalists lends voluminous financial assistance to the construction of Madrashes in the name of building a centre of spirituality. The irony lies in the fact that such religious institutions are, in fact, turned into the breeding centre of terrorists. Using the up-to-date technology, human-beings invented missiles and other man-killing devices. So the demolition of World Trade Center down to the ground occurred within a moment. The new technology created the global crises, instigating one nation against another, one country against another, one territory against another.

In the age of globalization, based on a well-organized structure, crime syndicates have got a strong foothold all over the world. Of the organized crimes, human trafficking is not circumscribed to one or two countries. Bonded labor, the separation of several organs from human body, and atrocities against women earned nearly 45 billion dollars annually. Every year an estimated nearly 21 million people from 127 countries fall victim to trafficking. Over 240 million children aged about, 5 to 17, fall victim to bonded labor. From time to time, the recruitment of such children involves making them serve as child soldiers, camel jockeys and prostitutes. They are also used in drug-smuggling and in the production of pornography. Addition to illicit drugs is expanding all over the world day after day. The statistical data of 2003 reveal that narcotics valued at nearly 322 billion US dollars were traded. The unlawful trade that is in all likelihood detrimental to the survival of human race, covers nearly 1% of global trade.

The expansion of the market in forged money takes its origin from the development of technology. Computer programs, color printers and high quality photocopyers have facilitated the task of making banknotes. The preventive measures against forgery, involve a huge investment in making holograms, multicolored notes and embedding strips in the notes. Ink that is used in the making of notes may change colors at different angles. There goes a saying that 3 fake notes are available out of every 10,000 US dollars.

Money laundering lets human situation take on a complicated turn. The transaction of nearly 1.5 trillion US dollars, illegally obtained, takes place every year in such a way that the identity or illegality of the source, the illegality of the transfer and the identity or criminality of people remains undetected. The crime leads to transnational bribery, sex trade, human trafficking, arms-smuggling, forgery and so on. Credit Card involves another sophisticated way of encouraging financial theft. The transfer of someone's money, deposited into an online savings account, to that of someone else, exemplifies, in the best possible way, the act of stealing.

Various chemical substances are improperly used by the market profiteers in a hundred different ways. Formalin is used to cause the ripening of unripened fruits. Certain chemicals are used to fatten up cows. It stands within the prospect of human judgment that only profit—however unethical or unjust—is the best thing in life under the economic system of free enterprise. A wave of profiteering and crime causes the undermining of human commitment to traditional values. In a true sense, human qualms behavior has faded into nothingness.

Even a few decades back, human beings couldn't think of something like cyber crime. There appeared before humankind a computer hacker who tries to break into computer system, especially in order to get secret or confidential information that is stored there. It goes difficult to secure a password for data protection. So the formation of cyber police across the globe is urgently needed to trace out cyber criminals. The necessity of taking the matter into consideration has also dawned upon the policy-makers of Bangladesh.

The extent to which, we get ready with alertness, watchfulness, and preparedness for the overwhelming task of combating unknown crimes, will determine and pin-point the nature of future social stability and order. The task of deciding, with accuracy, types of social crises; plus an adjustment to proper and well-designed use of new technology, will prove effective in countering the negative by-products that come into being under the social progression system. Equipped with proper training, skill and expertise, if the Bangladesh Police move forward, they can certainly pave the way for the acceleration of social development.
