BANGLADESHIS TRAPPED IN LIBYA

Safe exit not the only concern

Thousands without food, water; Egypt denies entry to 400

ARUN DEVNATH and PORIMOL PALMA

Thousands of desperate Bangladeshis are crying for food, water and a safe exit from violence-riven Libya, witnesses said yesterday amid unfolding scenes of deepening chaos in the sprawling desert country.

Top officials said they do not think Bangladesh has the need for a large-scale evacuation of its citizens from Libya immediately, dealing a double blow to the marooned people, as other Asian countries have already moved to rescue their nationals.

Brega, or Marsa Al Brega, about a 1,000km east of Tripoli, is just one area where at least 600 Bangladeshis are struggling to survive hungry days in a so-called camp.

They had worked for Al Nahar Company, which was set up by the Libyan government in 2006 for irrigation and water supply across the country. They are now without any job as the company has suspended its operations in the wake of rioting by anti-government protesters and bloody crackdowns by Libya's brutal regime. The flow of income for the workers has come to a halt.

"We are living off little food and with no electricity and water," said

Other forces take lesson from mutiny

Move to have stringent law to discourage armed rebellion

JULFIKAR ALI MANIK and SHARIFUL ISLAM

The horrifying border guard mutiny in 2009 has prompted other forces, which have no stringent law regarding rebellion, to mull stronger and severe punishment as a preventive measure.

The Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) has already enacted a law with a provision of death penalty for mutiny while the Ansar, which witnessed several rebellions so far, has already formulated a draft law making the provision of the same retribution. The highest punishment for mutiny in Ansar is now six months' imprisonment.

The jail force, which uses firearms to some extent, has nothing against mutiny in their existing laws, said sources, adding that the prison authorities are reviewing the existing jail code to strengthen the laws keeping in mind any possible mutiny or resentment among jail guards in future. There are around 7,000 jail guards in 66 jails across the country.

Police officials said although they have no direct law for mutiny, the punishment for such offences can also be ensured under the civil law. Sources said police experienced a mutiny during Ershad regime when some police personnel were sacked under disciplinary actions.

The Armed Police Battalion Ordinance, 1979, based on which Rapid Action Battalion was established, states in article-8(1) that the punishment for mutiny will be life term at best while 10 years' imprisonment at least.

Govt plans SIM tax cut

Also to rationalise 2G licence renewal fees

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government plans to reduce SIM taxes, and rationalise the fees for 2G licence renewal and spectrum charges, Telecommunications Minister Rajiuddin Ahmed Raju said yesterday.

"I have already talked to the finance minister so the eight hundred taka tax on SIM [subscriber's identification module] could be reduced in the upcoming budget," the minister said at a media briefing at his ministry.

Raju said, only one out of the six mobile phone operators can afford the tax. "As a result, the industry passes the tax on to the subscribers indirectly. So, we are thinking about the issue."

For long, the mobile operators have been branding the

TIGERS FACE IRELAND TODAY

Win is order of the day

MOHAMMAD ISAM

The Bangladesh cricket team will experience the other side of the coin against Ireland today in their World Cup group B encounter, a game where they will be firm favourites.

A full house crowd is again expected at the Sher-e-Bangla National Stadium in Mirpur as the Tigers take on a less-fancied side who are considered weak against the turning ball and under sub-continent conditions. But the Irish camp could take heart from the sudden spate of injuries in the Tigers' camp, forcing the think-tank into uncertainty over the composition of the starting eleven.
