Dhaka University students set fire to a bus and vandalise around 100 vehicles and its proctor office yesterday over the death of Muhammad Redwan, a post-graduate student of the university's Arabic department. Khaleque said KCC set an example as all its 31 wards hung the charter.

"It is a very good initiative as people can now be more aware of the services from the public service providers and also ensure accountability of the providers," he said.

Praising the NGO's role, he suggested spreading the charter in union level to make people aware of their rights.

Abu Taj Mohammad Jakir Hossain, deputy secretary of establishment ministry, said the charter is a supplement to Right to Information.

The service standard can reach a desired level if people know what service they can ask for and what the agencies can provide, he said.

He stressed the need for changing attitudes of public servants in delivering the services and urged NGOs to help implement and monitor the charter's activities.

Moderating the meeting, MJF Executive Director Shaheen Anam said citizens' charter helps expedite good governance and thus should be replicated in every city corporation.

Farzana Naim, director (governance) of MJF, said a periodic assessment of the charter is essential for its proper functioning.
