Judicial probe finds over 26,000 involved in 18,000 major crimes; govt to file cases if victims fear retaliation

M RAHMAN

A judicial probe commission has found the involvement of 26,352 people, including 25 ministers and lawmakers of the previous BNP-Jamaat alliance government, in the 2001 post-polls violence.

The government will file cases against the alleged perpetrators if the victims are still afraid to file lawsuits against them for fear of reprisal, Home Minister Sahara Khatun told reporters at her secretariat office yesterday, seven months after the commission submitted its report to her on April 24.

She said there had been more than 18,000 incidents of major crimes, including murder, rape, arson and looting by cadres of the then ruling BNP-Jamaat alliance in the 15 months

TI'S GRAFT INDEX

Bangladesh betters a bit

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh was ranked 13th from the bottom in the annual corruption perception index (CPI) by the Transparency International (TI), only one notch up from its position last year.

On a scale of 1 to 10, it scored 2.7, which is 0.3 points higher than the previous year. Countries scoring below 3 on the scale represent existence of unbridled corruption in their societies.

New Zealand scored the highest, 9.5, to top the 2011 list of least corrupt countries. Somalia and North Korea jointly became the worst scoring only 1.0 followed by Myanmar and Afghanistan both of which scored 1.5.

The Berlin-based global civil society group, campaigning against corruption, has been publishing the report every year since 1995. The report was published in Dhaka as well as other countries simultaneously yesterday.

The index is based on perception of how corrupt the Economy in critical condition: Khaleda

Slams govt for inefficiency, graft

Projecting a bleak picture of the country's economy, BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia yesterday blamed inefficiency, corruption and mismanagement of the government for the situation.

"The economy is in deep crisis. An anarchic situation has been created in the macro-economic management but there is no visible initiative to overcome this situation," she said and warned that the government would have to bear all responsibility for this situation.

CHANGES TO UPAZILA ACT Parishad victim, others happy

SHAKHAWAT LITON

The latest changes to the Upazila Parishad Act 1998 appear to be a blatant example of how the government has tactfully tried to make both the field level bureaucracy and aggrieved upazila parishads' chairmen and vice-chairmen "happy".

And in doing so, the government curtailed to a large extent the powers of the parishads and did not even hesitate to take a stance against a decentralisation of power.

So making the upazila parishads, constituted in January 2009, functional may remain a far cry, although the changes were brought about by giving a well-publicised impression of making the parishads stronger.

The changes brought to the act by passing a bill in parliament in a matter of five minutes on Tuesday vested the executive powers of the parishads in the chairmen. Before the changes these executive powers was exclusively vested in the parishads, an elected body, and the parishads was empowered to authorise chairmen or vice-chairmen or any members to exercise those executive powers.

Hopes for climate fund fading fast

INAM AHMED, from Durban

Chances are becoming bleak for setting up the Green Climate Fund (GCF) under which the climate-affected poor countries are supposed to get $100 billion a year from 2020 as the US feels that the formation of the fund should be scrutinised further.

A transitional committee had worked on the formation and modalities of the fund and submitted its report at the climate conference in Durban. But the US feels it should be further reviewed. It feels since the GCF would become the global financial institution its governing instrument should be designed carefully.

Saudi Arabia is also adamant on its opposition to the GCF as it feels that the mitigation measures proposed in the fund would limit its oil business.

A set of countries including Venezuela has said they want the governance structure of the fund to be clear. Columbia and
