Remembering Bangladesh's friends

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

When looting, arson, massacre and brutal persecution aimed at erasing the existence of Bangladesh, the then East Pakistan, was encircling Bangalees, a ray of hope and support shone bright from a neighbour.

This ray was a series of collective acts of humanity from thousands of individual Indians, glowing proof that the saying "A friend in need is a friend indeed" is a reality.

These acts were reflected in a documentary, "Dushshomoyer Bondhu" (a friend in troubled times), produced by journalist Shahriar Kabir.

The documentary was screened in the city's WVA auditorium on Tuesday (December 6). Ekatturer Ghatok Dalal Nirmul Committee organised the screening to commemorate the date, when India became the first country to recognise Bangladesh in 1971.

The 1.5-hour documentary was shot in Tripura, Meghalaya, West Bengal, Jharkhand, Delhi and Maharashtra.

It contains interviews of high officials, social workers, journalists and cultural activists from India who served Bangladeshi survivors lucky to escape through the borders opened by India after the crackdown on March 25, 1971.

These Indians helped in the refugee camps, trained the Bangladeshi freedom fighters and provided moral support at a crucial time when an estimated 30 lakh Bangladeshis were brutally murdered and around two lakh women were violated.

"Deep in the night of April 16, 1971 in Kolkata, the government in exile was finalised. Suddenly we discovered that there was no flag," said Planning Minister Air Vice Marshal AK Khandker at a discussion after the screening.

"Someone spoke of a tailor near the Bangladesh high commission in Kolkata. We went there and awakened the poor tailor. He agreed to make the flag and spent the whole night doing so.

"When we asked how much he charged, the tailor said, 'Sir, please forgive me. I cannot take any money'," said Khandker, the then deputy chief of staff of the Bangladesh forces.

The documentary narrates the views of the widow of an Indian soldier named Albert Ekka, who was killed while fighting the Pakistani army to save a freedom fighters' camp at Gangasagar in Brahmanbaria.

Now a resident of Ranchi in Jharkhand, India, the widow Balandina was asked how she took her husband's death. "It was very painful, but I forgot the pain as he wanted to save the lives of his co-fighters," she said.

Around 17,000 Indian soldiers were killed during the War of Liberation.

Rabin Sengupta, a photojournalist from Tripura, narrates how he rushed to Akhaura only to find the bodies of women, young and old, stripped of their clothes, some dead while others lay injured.

"How could I take their photos? They were my mothers and sisters. I could not do it," says Rabin in the documentary as he went on crying.

Well-known Indian film star Waheeda Rehman mobilised the showbiz community there to generate funds.

The Urdu-speaking Waheeda, in the documentary, says, "I went ahead to help because it is humanity that stands high, not language, culture or boundary."

Indian military expert K Subramaniam said, "Indira Gandhi's government imposed a 'Bangladesh tax' in 1971, but nobody protested. Now, if a tax of two paise is imposed, Indians set fire to tram depots."

Indira Gandhi, the then Indian prime minister, played a pivotal role in generating international opinion for Bangladesh's independence and sheltered around one crore Bangladeshi refugees.

"This friendship can never be forgotten. Let us make it stronger and maintain it forever," said Khandker.

Deputy Leader of the House Syeda Sajeda Chowdhury, Maj Gen (ret'd) KM Shafiullah, State Minister for Cultural Affairs Promod Mankin, Daily Sun Editor Syed Anwar Hossain and acting Indian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Sanjay Bhattacharya also spoke on the occasion, chaired by former Justice Mohammad Ghulam Rabbani.

WAR CRIMES TRIAL Legal experts brush aside BNP's demand

BSS, Dhaka

Leading legal experts have brushed aside the main opposition BNP's demand for closing the proceedings of the International Crimes Tribunal (ICT), saying that without pinpointing a reason in its support, raising such a demand is politically motivated.

"It is merely a demand with a political motive," Dr Shahdeen Malik said adding that without giving any explanation from a legal point of view, a demand for stopping trial of all war criminals is political.

"Moudud didn't specify when, where, how and which clause of the ICT Act conflicts with the constitution and international law," he noted.

AFM Mesbahuddin Ahmed, ex-president of the Supreme Court Bar Association, termed Moudud's demand unreasonable, unconstitutional and politically motivated.

Referring to the chairman of Bangladesh Human Rights Commission, Dr Mizanur Rahman, Mesbahuddin said the ICT fulfils all international requirements.

"In case of such crimes, other countries usually do not have any appeal provision, but in the ICT Act there is a provision to challenge the verdict of the ICT in the Appellate Division," he added.

Former law minister and Supreme Court lawyer Abdul Matin Khasru said in different countries there is a lot of evidence for holding such trials even after a decade.

He said Moudud raised this demand to appease a certain quarter and protect their interest. The accused are getting all legal facilities, he added.

academics from Bangladesh are taking part in the dialogue.

The dialogue will be followed by a one-day Bangladesh Policy Dialogue on Friday to come up with an action and implementation plan.

Inaugurating the dialogue, Education Minister Nurul Islam Nahid said this policy dialogue is a wonderful opportunity for Bangladesh academia to be involved in strengthening the university-community interaction for the benefit of the people.

Dhaka University Vice-Chancellor Prof AAMS Arefin Siddique said the policy dialogue will help explore new horizon in the areas of education, research and technology.

British High Commissioner in Bangladesh Robert Gibson and UGC Member Professor Dr MMuhibur Rahman also spoke.

German envoy supports LDCs on climate issue

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The German ambassador to Bangladesh yesterday supported the demand of vulnerable and least developed countries for a legally binding agreement on climate change, terming it the only way to cap global warming at two degree Celsius.

"We all need the present climate change negotiations in Durban to come up with tangible results," said German Ambassador Holger Michael in a statement.

Rising sea levels are already threatening the territories of small island states and vast stretches of the coastline in countries such as Bangladesh.

Germany is aware of how pressing the climate change problem is and intends to reduce emissions by 40 percent by 2020 and by 80 to 95 percent by 2050, he said.

Germany is also ready to play its part in financing measures for both long term and fast start fund. Between 2010 and 2012, the German government is providing these countries a total 1.26 billion euros in additional funds for mitigation and adaptation, he said.
