Scrap power project, save Sundarbans

5 organisations ask govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Five prominent organisations yesterday demanded that the government scrap the proposed project of a coal-based thermal power plant at Rampal in Bagerhat as they said the plant, if built, would pose a threat to the Sundarbans.

At a press conference at the Jatiya Press Club, speakers said the decision of setting up a power plant on the periphery of the Sundarbans, a wildlife sanctuary and the lone habitat of Bengal tigers, was "suicidal".

Transparency International Bangladesh, Bangladesh Environment Lawyers Association (Bela), ActionAid, Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon (Bapa) and Save the Sundarbans placed the demand.

An agreement was signed on January 29 with India's state-run National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC) for setting up a 1,300-megawatt plant at Rampal, 14 km from the world's largest mangrove forest.

An environment impact assessment was done following the deal but the report did not identify the Sundarbans as a wildlife sanctuary, speakers said in the conference.

Coal-fired plants emit huge carbon dioxide and produce ashes, which lead to environment pollution, experts say. The wastes from a coal-based plant also contaminate nearby water bodies, thus damaging the ecosystem.

Bangladesh has a rich and storied history when it comes to fabrics. The beautiful silks and muslins of this country were once famed throughout Asia and beyond. The expert weavers of this nation garnered respect from most everyone around the world who had a passion for artistry and fashion.

Jamdani was the queen of these muslins. It was the most expensive fabric in the region, and clothing weaved from Jamdani was special. Jamdani apparel was worn on select occasions, like weddings and festivals. Jamdani saris were extremely popular among women.

It is perhaps this tendency to wear Jamdani only on special occasions that became its downfall. Women slowly stopped purchasing more than one or two Jamdani saris, seeing as they are so rarely worn. Because of the drop of interest in the market, innovation regarding Jamdani also slowed down. Instead of a fabric that holds a thousand potential applications, Jamdani became stuck with the stigma that it is only suitable for expensive saris.

However, all is far from lost for Jamdani. The design motifs are still unique, and the fabric quality is still amazing. All Jamdani needs is for someone to breath new life into it with innovation and adaptability. Instead of confining Jamdani to the narrow role of expensive sari fabric, it can be applied to various fashion articles. It can be modernized to suit the tastes of trendy new fashion-enthusiasts. The international fashion market will surely get excited if they are reintroduced to such an exceptional vision of beauty.

Jamdani is full of promise. If the potentials of this great Bangladeshi treasure can be unlocked, it is sure to take the world by storm.
