Chinese food for thought

debating over which political system -- democracy, autocracy or communism-is good for the people. But eventually, what it all boils down to is the welfare of the people or the lack of it.

"They (critics) don't understand China," Li Jun, the Chinese ambassador to Bangladesh, tells The Daily Star. "But we know their countries better than them."

Truly, a look inside China can offer some food for serious thought for all, especially for Bangladeshis. China and Bangladesh indeed have two different government systems. Yet, once in China, one cannot help but go for a reality check on people's status in politics and the state of affairs back home.

The legendary American president Abraham Lincoln possibly set the tone for the government of every political system with his immortal quote: "Government of the people, by the people, for the people.'

The ruling Communist Party of China (CPC), which is the head and heart of the Chinese government, is also tuned to it, maybe in a different way. Talking with top leaders, people and foreigners, it appeared that the CPC has its government system cut out for the people.

Food prices continue to go up globally, with China being the only exception. When asked, commoners struggled to name a single food item that was spiked in recent years. Prices of basic food items remain the same, if not reduced. Very recently, the Chinese government halved bus and metro rail fares, and telephone tariff to facilitate people's mobility and national cell phone obsession.

In Bangladesh, prices that go up never come down. Prices of essentials keep on soaring at every excuse available. If there is no reason, then it is left to market manipulators with the government being a spectator. People are left to reel from over 11pc food inflation. Utility bills and transport costs are being hiked intermittently. Now, the finance minister wants 25pc tariff from mobile calls.

CPC has a good justification too: a chunk of people's money should be spent on people's comfort. And who cares to know about the state of government coffers when the economy is booming?

Critics may argue it is a usual trick of all authoritarian governments that try beyond their ability to make people happy and keep regimes away from danger. In reality, the CPC cares least about popular stunts. China precisely knows what it needs to do in the next five years and who are to implement it. It always comes through a process, and China's priorities are always fixed. Behind the scenes, the CPC bigwigs dedicate their time to researching strategies of the world and the needs of China before drawing up an action plan for the future. They spend years to find out loopholes in the plan and plug them. At the same time, through a proven electoral process emerge the leaders who will carry out the CPC strategy over the next five years.

Leaders of the next government demonstrate their ability and vision at the grassroots level and then proceed to win the vote of confidence of central leaders. In the shadow of the president, his successor spends months in examining the jobs in hand and prepares himself for a smooth and swift execution. Just the way Vice President Xi Jinping is now waiting in the wings of President Hu Jintao, who will retire later in the year after completing the maximum two 5-year terms in office. Hu has been extremely successful, and the Chinese people know for sure his successor will be even more dynamic and conquering. They are waiting eagerly for a faster ride to development.

The outcome of the Chinese system is all too evident. The statistics are enough to silence even the harshest of its critics. Led by the CPC, China has become the world's second largest economy, largest product exporter, largest industrial manufacturer, second largest importer and owner of largest foreign exchange reserves.

Interestingly, China is not Of course, all these resting on its laurels. "China heavily subsidised. But the Jianzhang, a top CPC leader, development and security.

admits flatly. The country is continuously identifying its mistakes and correcting them in a systemic way, through which China embraced reforms in 1978 and moved on.

In contrast, Bangladesh continues to date a heartbreaking reality for ages. Like it or not, it is either Khaleda Zia or Sheikh Hasina. People dare not dream of all-conquering leaders. Neither do they expect politicians to work for the people and their right to economic development and welfare. They only cast their votes and hope that things will not get any worse with the change of govern-

China deals with lawbreakers ruthlessly. Lethal melamine was found in Chinese powdered milk, and the scam sparked a global outcry a couple of years back. Quick deaths, penalties and a shutdown of factories cleaned up the industry in weeks. The culprits or the accused did not have a chance to manipulate the judiciary and obtain an 'injunction' or 'stay order' on justice literally like our toxic paracetamol syrup manufacturers, who are accused of killing over 2,700 children between 1972 and Chinese law enforcement may be accused of human rights violations. But, at least, China is not allowing its law to be abused by snatchers, grabbers of rivers and properties, corrupt people, killers and drug traders.

The CPC identified corruption as the biggest threat to its development and declared total war against the menace 10 years back. According to statistics, it saved so far about Tk 92,000cr in a province of Guangdong alone through anti-corruption initiatives.

Our governments too declared zero tolerance against corruption. Yet, corruption rules supreme. No wonder why Chinese companies that are clean at home get questioned about their affairs in Bangladesh. China is a follower of different schools of human rights, and fails to understand the West's concern for its actions. To it, human rights are all about people's

The country is a home to one fifths of the world population, with 130cr of 134cr population living in the rural and urban areas. Understandably, development programmes are directed towards rural and urban population. The village development programme of the CPC can be an eye-opener to the developing world. Farmers and farming facilities inside a developed village. No middleman is raking money as easy road communications allows farmers to sell their produce at market prices.

Bangladesh is still known for its traditional secular nature and religious tolerance. But this Muslimmajority nation is getting insensitive too towards minority communities. Secularism could not be brought back into the constitution yet, and state-run TV and radio stopped citation of Gita and Tripitaka long ago.

The CPC is accused of being least tolerant of opposing views, and freedom of press and politics. The Chinese leadership argues, saying that its political system is open only to cooperation and consultation, not confrontation. Strange na it may sound, but China has eight minor parties, 'cooperating' with the CPC and contributing to the 'peaceful' development of the country.

NBR mulls surcharge

Ahmed told a press conference at its headquarters in the capital yesterday.

The tax authority also mulls offering tax rebate for donations to Padma bridge fund, he added.

The conference was organised to review the revenue collection performances in the 2011-12 fiscal year and steps taken to achieve the revenue collection target for the current fiscal year.

The NBR earned Tk 94,447 crore in revenue in the last fiscal year, exceeding its target of 92,370 crore.

It started examining scopes to impose surcharges after the cabinet on July 9 decided to start construction of the 6.15-kilometre long Padma bridge with domestic finance.

The decision came after the World Bank (WB) cancelled its $1.2 billion loan agreement for the bridge on "corruption charges."

The WB along with Jica, ADB and IDB had promised to provide $2.3 billion for the estimated $2.9 billion pro-

Following the resignation of former communications minister Syed Abul Hossain from the cabinet early this week, the government now expects the lead financier WB to revise its loan cancellation decision.

Asked whether the surcharge would be required if the WB reverses its decision, the NBR chief said Finance Minister AMA Muhith has asked them to proceed on. "We are looking for options to ensure the surcharges are tolerable to all.'

He, however, noted that if the WB finances the project, tax burden on people would below.

No sector has been selected yet for imposing the surcharge, mentioned Nasiruddin; but as a new sector, surcharges might be imposed on mobile phone

The experience of surcharge collection for the Bangabandhu Bridge will be a benchmark in this regard, he said.

Sources at NBR said even if the WB agrees to finance the project, the construction cost is likely to rise to Tk 26,000 crore from the present estimate of around Tk 21,000 crore due to the delay.

Under such circumstances, the government will

The BNP leader alleged that cases were being filed against Khaleda Zia and Tarique Rahman only to keep them away from participating in the next general elections.

He said the government is talking of democracy but it is indulging in antidemocratic activities; even many provisions were inserted in the constitution which are directly contradictory to democratic norms.

Mentioning that the government has failed to run the country, Mirza Fakhrul said Syed Abul Hossain's resignation proves that the government was involved in the Padma bridge project graft.

He also said, "One of the reasons why insurgency in the state has subsided is because of growing employment opportunities, development of infrastructure and expansion in agriculture." However, indefinite curfew
