Entering through the main gate of the Faculty of Fine Arts, Dhaka University, one will find a sculpture, "Serious Discussion". The sculpture is a few yards from the main entrance and in front of the main building. The artwork by Tejosh Halder Josh depicts some young individuals around a table.

Kehkasha Sabah, a student of the department of Drawing and Painting, innovatively put down some photographs in front of the figures to give them a fresh appearance. Her installation, "Striving Contrast", is a message against food adulteration through formalin, as she uses photographs of some fruits.

this chance to tell more of the tale? And the answer from our perspective as the filmmaker, and as fans, was an unreserved 'yes.'"

Jackson said that extending the project to three films "allows us to tell the full story of the adventures of Bilbo Baggins and the part he played in the sometimes dangerous, but at all times exciting, history of Middle-earth". Filming for the two Hobbit movies, which began in March 2011, ended at the start of this month after 266 days.

Last week Nayeem returned to Dhaka after wrapping up shooting for "Kortakahini" directed by Aronno Anowar.

At present Nayeem is busy with Eid projects. He has completed shooting for Fahmida Irfan's "Ohon Chhayar Kabyo" with Richi Solaiman as his co-actor. The shooting of Aryan's "Megh Brishti Otohpor" has also finished. Naveem's co-actor is Bidya Sinha Meem. Two more projects that have been completed are Din Mohammad Montu's "Grihobondi" and Rubel's "Tomar Onno Nam" where Jenny and Lux Superstar Mashiyat are his co-actors respectively. Nayeem says, "I am shooting almost every day for my Nayeem is also working in films. One of his films has already been released. Now he has begun to work in "Bhalobashar Rongdhonu", directed by Nabil Ashraf. The shooting for the songs has been completed. In this movie, Nayeem's co-actors are Achol and Anne. Nayeem says, "This is a triangular love story. Personally I am very hopeful about this project. And if the audience demands, then I will continue acting in cinema and in drama simultaneously."

Nayeem is a student of English Literature. He opines that his keen interest in the media has helped him realise his ambitions.

In 1993, Vidal won the National Book Award for his massive "United States Essays, 1952-1992," a collection of erudite and infuriating critiques on politics, sexuality, religion and literature written originally for such publications as The Nation, Esquire and the New York Review of Books. Threaded throughout his pieces are anecdotes about his famous friends and foes, who included Anais Nin, Tennessee Williams, Christopher Isherwood, Orson Welles, Truman Capote, Frank Sinatra, Jack Kerouac, Marlon Brando, Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward, Eleanor Roosevelt and a variety of Kennedys. He counted Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and Al Gore among his relatives.

Vidal began his public life at age 22 when his first novel, the World War II-themed "Williwaw," won the wide admiration of critics. Two years later, however, the literary golden boy became an outcast with "The City and the Pillar" (1948), one of the first mainstream novels to deal frankly with homosexuality.

Ignored by book critics for the next several years, he the Pentagon, suggesting that the George W. Washington, Hollywood and literary salons around the world. But he acted more as the outsider. A fierce critic of the U.S. as a "national security state," Vidal seemed to move further into the political wilderness after the 9/11 attacks in New York and on Vidal graduated from Phillips Exeter Academy in 1943, skipped college and joined the U.S. Army. He trained at the Virginia Military Institute and served on a freight-supply ship in the Aleutian Islands, where he became familiar with the sudden blasts of wind called williwaws. During night watches in port he began to write "Williwaw," which earned flattering reviews and established its young author as a leading member of the post-World War II class of first-time novelists that Vidal was far more successful writing about political power than acquiring it. His first historical novel was "Julian" (1964), a bestseller about the 4th-century Roman emperor who rejected Christianity. Praised as a vivid evocation of the era, it freed Vidal from literary Siberia. He went on to re-imagine American history in "Washington, D.C.," "Burr," "1876," "Lincoln," "Empire," "Hollywood" and "The Golden Age." "I am at heart a propagandist, a tremendous hater, a tiresome nag, complacently positive that there is no human problem which could not be solved if people would simply do as I advise," he said in "Gore Vidal: A Biography" (1999) by Fred Kaplan. Despite his crushing forthrightness on many topics,

Vidal preferred ambiguity in the personal realm. SOURCE: LOS ANGELES TIMES
