

A TRANSFORMED DHAKA

WHILE children have the most fun on eid, adults get to relax and really have those precious family times they had always been meaning to have. The Shishu Park at Shahbagh was, as always, a key attraction for families, especially children, during the recent holidays. For adults, eid is a time to visit family and friends, with movements made almost unbelievably easier in a capital almost devoid of traffic. With a huge number of people gone elsewhere to spend eid, Dhaka is left largely to people who have families inhabiting the mega city. On any ordinary day, many justifiably grumble about the city's horrendous traffic and living conditions. But it all changes during the holidays, when everything seems to go through a refreshing transformation, albeit for a transient phase.
