

HEAVY LOAD ON TINY SHOULDERS

HOW old would these kids be after all? How much would they know of future and career? Yet they are worried. So are their parents. The long queues of little children and their parents and their anxious wait while their young ones sit for admission tests depict how competitive things have become for the tiny tots. With the passing of every year, admission to capital's reputed schools, class-II and above, has become tougher. The pressure on those little shoulders has only increased as the guardians naturally want them to have the best education they could afford for them.

Photo: RASHED SHUMON

