An agonising visit to airport

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

It was the first time in her life that she saw Shahjalal International Airport. She had always wanted to see it with her own eyes—the planes, the runways, the big intimidating building. She had hoped to come here one day to receive her husband as he would home from his trip.

But she never knew that when the day finally came, it would be only to collect the charred body of her dead husband.

Farida Khatun had spoken to her husband, Jaru Miya, only half an hour before the disastrous fire that killed him, along with 12 other Bangladeshis, in Bahrain on January 11.

As she waited for his body to arrive in the airport yesterday, she kept replaying the last conversation she had with her husband.

"I spoke to him only for a few minutes, to tell him that I was sick, that he needed to send me money," said a grieving Farida, with tears in her eyes. "Now he is gone, and I am left with four children, and no one to support us anymore."

Next to her, Shahadat and Teetu's father,

Shah Alam, stared blankly at the passport size photos of his two sons. It took each of them Tk 3.5 lakh to migrate to Bahrain, and they still had not sent back much money home.

"Now I have lost both of them, and all hope of repaying the loans we owe to people," he said, his voice breaking with emotion.

Halima Akhter Tonni, a young bride, held her 10-year-old son, Shaon, tightly in her arms, still in shock about her husband's death, unable to process the clamour of journalists and cameramen crowding around her.

"He had only moved to a new apartment six days ago..." she muttered meekly. Now her son would grow up without even a single memory of his father, who left the country two months after his birth.

Sumon Islam, elder brother of Sapan and Sayful Islam, said his mother was inconsolable, unable to bear the news of the death of both her sons. "She has become physically weak, and I don't know how she will be able to react at the sight of their corpses," he said, as he placed their coffins in the ambulance.

13 Bangladeshis' bodies arrive

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The bodies of 13 Bangladeshi workers who were killed in a fire in Bahrain on January 11 arrived home yesterday.

A flight of Emirates Airlines EK 838, carrying the bodies from Bahrain, landed at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport at 6:35pm.

The body of another Bangladeshi worker, Oli Ahmed, 28, who died in a building collapse on December 31 last year in Bahrain, also arrived in the same flight.

Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment Minister Khandker Mosharraf Hossain handed the bodies over to the families at the airport.

The minister also provided each of the families with Tk 35,500 for burial and said Tk 2 lakh will be given to each family as donation from the government.

The families have to place their certificate to receive the donation, added Khandaker Mosharraf.

Besides, the government is trying to realise the highest possible compensation from the workers' employers in Bahrain, the minister said, adding that they have already communicated to the six employers there.

On January 11, the fire swept through the labour camp they were living in.

TIB for completion of all war crimes cases

UNB, Dhaka

Expressing deep satisfaction over the International Crimes Tribunal's verdict, which sentenced Abul Kalam Azad alias Bachchu Razakar to death, Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) yesterday called for immediate all-out actions to execute it.

The graft watchdog body also demanded completion of all other similar pending cases in an appropriate way ignoring pressure, influence and fear.

"January 21 will remain a red letter day in the history of Bangladesh, marking the beginning of a glorious phase of truly proud and meaningful victory after relieving the national agony of unmet justice for too long," he added.

Govt to amend CHT land commission act
Says Dipankar Talukdar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has taken initiative to revise some provisions of the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) Land Dispute Resolution Commission Act, 2001 to make the land commission more efficient, said State Minister for CHT Affairs Dipankar Talukdar yesterday.

We hope the commission will be effective after completion of the amendment and it will act properly to resolve land dispute in Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT)," he also said, while addressing as chief guest the inaugural session of a seminar.

He, however, did not mention which provisions will be amended.

National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) and International Labour Organisation (ILO) jointly organised the seminar titled "The ILO Conventions Relating to Ethnic Minorities" at Senate Bhaban in Dhaka University.

NHRC Chairman Dr Mizanur Rahman said, "In the last year of this incumbent government, we do not want to hear assurance only. We want to see some implementation of the CHT peace accord in this last year."

The CHT Land Dispute Resolution Commission has remained virtually inactive since its chairman Justice Khademul Islam Chowdhury retired on July last year.
