Cover Story 8-15

An Unhappy Homecoming

When the country's migrant workers return home after a few years abroad, they are met with a new challenge – reintegration into the Bangladeshi society. Often, they come back ill, with empty pockets or suffering from trauma. As failed migration is still a social taboo, they struggle on their own.

Out of Touch

As one strike after other is crippling the country, the government, it seems, is a little out of touch with the ground reality.
