CHILD Promoting Child Rights

CHILD Promoting Child Rights

Political promises made to children in election manifestoes

OTH Awami League (AL) and Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP), the leading political parties in the country, declared several points regarding women and children development in their 2008 and 2001 election manifestos.

Awami League Election Manifesto 2008 In the 2008 manifesto, AL chalked out issues to develop in sectors like health and family welfare, empowerment of women, welfare of children and juvenile as well as sports and culture.

The party which formed the government with the manifesto promised to work in order to ensure proper nutrition to children and

AL also stated to update the population policy and take measures to ensure birth con-

For the children and juvenile welfare, the Child labour will be gradually abolished in other activities through coercion or enticement vention on children rights, adequate measures will be taken for developing their physical and For mental and physical developments of the children, adolescent and young, AL promised to make sports and exercise compulsory at

In the manifesto, AL also set milestones for

It said to achieve 100 percent student enrolincluded achieving infant mortality rate comment at primary level within 2010. It also all sectors. Use of children in political and will be prohibited. In line with the UN con-mental capacity and for their nutrition and political party promised to work on child

The manifesto reads:

all education institutions.

women and children developments.

trol and reproductive health care.

In order to ensure women empowermen and equality in rights and opportunities, the Women Development Policy formulated by Awami League in 1997 will be revived, the child deaths will be minimised significantly, while children will be prevented from being abused in political activities.

Proper initiatives regarding women's participation in Parliament and other sectors will be Effective programmes will be launched to stop child labour, especially hazardous jobs children involved in. For children's proper physical and mental growth, required sports equipment will be provided in educational election manifesto.

by Awami League to establish equal rights, opportunity and dignity of women will con-ing down at 15 from 54 per thousand and reducing maternal death rate at 1.5 percent from 3.8 percent within 2021.

BNP Election Manifesto 2008

The BNP manifesto for the ninth Parliamentary election consisted of several points related to children and women developments. If the party achieve power it would ensure that in next five years no children are remaining away from school.

BNP promised to take effective measures to increase women's participation at policy making level, empowerment and dignity. They would give priority in recruiting women at different professions and facilitate with loans at small interest for those women who are involved in entrepreneurship and self Eligible women from rural areas would be given priority in recruiting employees at public services for rural level.

reduce children and women trafficking, eliminate dowry system and acid violence from the BNP manifesto reads that maternal and

The party will take extensive programmes to

AL Election Manifesto 2001 AL stated several points regarding women empowerment and child rights in its 2001 The party noted:

In society and elsewhere in the state, policy and implementation programmes taken earlier

Women's participation in national development programmes and at policy making level To abolish gender inequality as well as empower women, new plans will be taken in lines with the UN declaration and Beijing forum for women.

Reserved seats in the Parliament would be increased to 60. Constituency for a reserved seat would consist of five regular constituencies, while women MPs will earn seats through direction election.

AL would give priory women education. It would take stern action to stop violence against women as well as children and women

More dormitories for working women would be built in district headquarters. As per UN treaty for child rights, necessary steps will be taken in the country to save child rights and building up them as future citizens. For poor and destitute children, child welfare board will be constituted and free education will be provided. BNP Election Manifesto 2001

Prosperous future of the country lies beneath the development of the children, BNP stated in its 2001 election manifesto.

The party, which won the election with the manifesto, vowed to ensure a safe society for children where they would grow up healthy

The party articulated some points in the

It said to initiate and further strengthen the vaccination programme for children. Extensive programme will be launched to reduce child

BNP also promised to launch extensive programmes to reduce maternal deaths.

It wanted to enhance programmes regarding ensuring nutrition for children. BNP wanted to take steps to ensure primary education for all

The manifesto articulates steps regarding abolishing child labour from the country. In this chord, initiatives for welfare of working, street, poor children as well as children with disabilities will be taken.

All kinds of laws against child abuse and for welfare will be formulated and implemented

Journeying to and from coaching classes during hartals has also been proved dangerous as seen from the case of schoolgirl Antu Barua

14, of Chittagong, who was hit by a cocktail thrown by hartal activists on March 28. She

All three of the children, Aref, Selim and Tithi expressed views akin to "we do not care about politics". And they should not have to - they have much more important things to do - political situation of the country affecting their like being children. Yet all of them find the critically injured her eye.

lives in multifold ways.

It's crime to use children as political shield our manifesto," he added. Referring to AL's 2008 manifesto, where issues such as poverty elimination and energy received priority, Lenin said his party is yet to finalise feasible and not utopian, we would definitely try to incorporate those in the priority issues for its next term if It is very important that we ensure an HE ruling Awami League (AL) is environment so that children experience sound physical and The Daily Star that the party has always mental health.

> voted to power again. However, he said AL will continue those programmes which led to achievements in millennium development goals during AL's regime including reduction in maternal and infant mortality and increase in school enrollment

"It is very important that we ensure an environment so that children experience sound physical and mental health," he said, adding how the state through its food, nutrition, health and education programmes should nurture the future nation-builders. "To create an intellectual society for our nation in future, we should provide our children with a scienceoriented education, healthy entertainment facilities and lessons on accurate history," said Lenin.

Regarding children's security and abuse of children in politics, he said that all political parties should come forward to stop this. Lenin referred to a programme organised by a human rights organisation recently in the capital where the opposition Bangladesh Nationalist Party was also present. "We criticised how it is a crim to use children as political shield."

"There are many political parties that force children to participate in rallies," Lenin said, "We must come of of this culture."

The Awami League policymaker sai his party's vision is to ascertain that children, the assets of the nation, acquire a long and healthy life and enjoy a happy childhood.

children from political violence Ruhul Kabir Rizvi, Joint Secretary General, BNP successful," he said giving example of how food incentive programmes in

> He also claimed that the maternal mortality rate came down because of the initiatives and steps BNP took during its reign. "Because of reduced maternal mortality, the chance that children have a healthy life is ensured," he said.

"Abuse of children

inside and outside home needs to be dealt with strongly.

the state to ensure proper nutrition and education for children so that they grow up as good citizens with the child grows up in such an envi responsible and conscious citizen, ronment that makes him/her a adults can choose the right leader for

"However, we need to ensure that Rizvi said it is the responsibility of It's state's responsibility to protect

ANGLADESH Nationalist Party (BNP), the main opposition political party of the current term, is busy with its struggle to ensure election under a nonpartisan caretaker government, rather than preparing its election manifesto

Talking to The Daily Star at his party office in Nayapaltan, BNP join secretary general Ruhul Kabir Rizvi said, "Since we are amidst a struggle we have not started working on the manifesto as yet."

However, he said, once the issue how the 10th general election would be held is resolved, BNP policymakers would start preparing the manifesto where child rights would be given the utmost priority. Rizvi claimed that the programmes

BNP implemented during their terms 1991-1995 and 2001-2006 targeting women and children helped Bangladesh reach the related development goals for which the country received much accolade worldwide. He referred to Pakistani economist and founder of UNDP's Human

Development Report (HDR) Dr

Mahbub ul Haq's comment that Bangladesh ranks top among the South Asian countries in terms of women employment and child nutri-

"The action plan we took to prevent drop-outs in schools were very

A child suffering from malnutrition would not experience proper schools helped reduce drop-outs. mental and physical development, he Rizvi also emphasised the need for proper entertainment for children. "In welfare economy, it is the responsibility of the state to ensure that," he "Can you imagine that we do not have any toy industry in this country," he said, adding, "We have to import most toys from countries like China. The state should ensure that inexpensive toys reach children. We need to address these issues." Regarding security of children, he said that abuse of children inside and outside home needs to be dealt with strongly. "It is the responsibility of state to protect everyone especially children from political violence." In reply to whether opposition higher intellectual capabilities; and as also has a role in ensuring child security, he said it is a matter of collective social responsibility to ensure that every child, irrespective of their socio-economic background enjoys a secured and healthy childhood.

Whither protection?

Pushing child safety and education to the edge

PHOTO: PALASH KHAN

Children fall victim to the nonchalance of the political parties.

T least one child died because of the political violence in the 60-hour hartal held from October 27 to October 29. Fourteen vear old Mohammad Arzu fell victim to a bout of violence between Awami eague and BNP factions in Chandpur.

Five other minors were injured in clashes during the same hartal all over the country Sohail Miah, 8, was targeted by a crude bomb while picking flowers from a roadside shrub in Bogura; Rahima Akhter, 9, was caught in a blast while playing in a field in Jurain in the capital, while Rony, 7, and Milton, 8, of Bogura, and Sumon, 14, of Jhalkathi, picked up unexplodable bomb out of curiosity which

All of these children were blossoming in a display of their childishness when they were attacked - they were playing, picking flowers or being curious about their surroundings These are perhaps some of the most direct ways of how children fall victim to the nonchalance of the political parties. Another, rather indirect way was pointed out by a little invalid boy begging on a lakeside bridge in in politics," said eight year old Selim, who bears stumps on all four of his limbs, "all I know is that no one is making sure I have food in my stomach."

The invalid eight year old's wisdom points out that political on-goings fail to give importance to what really matters - whether there is a little invalid boy rolling in roadside filth begging a few grains of rice, or children are going hungry, going uneducated, dying of Political mayhem severely disrupts the education of children with schools staying closed, to be made up later with extra classes

Aref, studying in class three in a private school in Dhanmondi complained to this

"Why do I need to know what is going on correspondent that going to school during weekends annoys him. On a hartal day, thirteen-year old Tithi got out of a coaching centre in Farmgate in the capital while her mother tried to hail a rick-

Tithi told this correspondent that she lives near the Mirpur zoo, but had to make a long,

Examination (JSC) is coming up. "We have to change rickshaws thrice during the journey, and I am very tired by the time I arduous journey to Farmgate and return by

COLLTICAL MOLENCE

get home," said Tithi.

Political on-goings fail to give importance to what really matters - whether there is a little invalid boy rolling in roadside filth begging a few grains of rice, or children are going hungry, going uneducated, dying of sicknesses."

rickshaw because her Junior Secondary Political mayhem severely disrupts the education of children with schools staying closed.

PHOTO: SK ENAMUL HAQ

Children's issues occupy backseat in Rural-urban equity in growth can election manifestoes Children used for political violence.

working on its manifesto for the ▲ 10th national parliamentary election. Nooh-ul-Alam Lenin, mem-making body of the ruling party, told treated children's issues with outmost

Lenin who was involved in preparing

AL's manifesto in 2001 and 2008, said that they have not finalised the points manifesto. Therefore, different human rights organisations, social bodies and related to child rights in their current importance since children are the future of the nation.

ber of AL presidium, the highest policy

AKRAM HOSEN

T ONE of the political parties in Bangladesh, including the leftists, keep children on their mind when they design their manifestos, said noted educationist Rasheda K Chowdhury.

As the political manifestos are targeted towards the voters, who are grownups, issues of protecting child rights remain absent in those, she "The parties tend to fail to see that the children of today will be voters once they are 18-years-old. In fact, they are the future leaders. So, the political parties will eventually gain if they focus on the development of children," said the former adviser to an interim caretaker government in an interview with The Daily Star. Even though the leftist parties claim to be inclusive and progressive, the issues of child rights are never prioritised in their manifesRasheda K Chowdhury, Educationist tos, she said.

Although the parties talk about development agendas like reducing child and maternal mortality, they never focus on creating child-friendly schools, curriculum and environment,

For some parties, she said, the focus on children can be summed up in a single sentence: Children will

People must force the parties into promising that they will never hold programmes that can harm educational environment...Parties should exempt schools and other educational institutions from hartal!"

not be involved in political programmes.

In Rasheda's opinion, political parties should make specific pledges and announce programmes rather than making empty promises. Moreover, the promises that are made by the parties are often breached, she said. "The parties do not only involve children in their programmes but make the underprivi programmes."

Commenting on how political programmes harm education, she said, "People must force the parties into promising that they will never hold programmes that can harm educational environment."

leged children risk their lives for their harm to the educational institution especially schools, she said. "Students of primary schools do not get enough contact hours with their teachers anyway. "Due to frequent hartals children

Programmes like hartal do much get even fewer learning hours in schools," she said. She thinks that the parties should exempt schools and other educational institutions from hartal.

Citing the example of Nepal, she said, political parties always keep manifestos, but they should be educational institutions out of con flict by declaring them as "peace Emphasising on giving due importance to child rights, she said, "Issues of health and education are mentioned as development agenda in the regarded as rights. First of all, the leaders themselves must understand what child rights are. If they are to bring about a real change, they must believe in the Howlader said things have changed globally a lot since Jatiyo Party was in power. So, they will take into consideration the present demands and aspirations of the children, many of who would soon

TAMANNA KHAN

BM Ruhul Amin Howlade secretary general of Jatiyo ▲ Party (JP), shared some of the points related to child rights, which are likely to appear in the election manifesto of the party.

An ally of the ruling 14-party alliance, JP has formed a commit headed by commerce minister GM Kader to prepare their election man festo which would detail out the matter, he said. Howlader said they would take steps to ensure that all children, orphan or with parents, receive all kinds of facilities that would help them grow up as good citizens. "It will be the government's responsib ity to ascertain security of children's life and their future." "Our manifesto would focus on points prioritising how we could maximise our contribution for children and protect their interest," he dren, he said. of European countries including parental abuse of children.

emphasise child rights ABM Ruhul Amin Howlader, Secretary General, JP

our party would take note of the

"A child growing up in a village would get a better environment in terms of greenery and space if we can ensure all the facilities as that of a city.

The experts and policy makers demands of the modern time keeping in mind the recently enacted Children Act 2013, which defines everyone below the age of 18 as chil-

JP secretary general referred to laws United Kingdom which protect children not only from abuse outside of home but also from parents' cruelty. He said similar laws should be in place in Bangladesh too to prevent

Regarding equity-based economic development and rapid, unplanned urbanisation that is widening the gap between rich and poor, Howlader said we can reduce discrimination only if we start working towards > development from grassroots level. "Standard of living is not same in urban and rural areas. People do not receive equal privileges," he said, adding that the evils of urbanisation can be prevented by ensuring all kinds of facilities in the villages across Bangladesh.

Referring to the village development projects during Hussien Muhammad Ershad's reign, Howlader described how creation of upazillas and construction of roads throughout the country had helped in the development of rural

Such grassroots level development is necessary for elimination of urban-rural discrimination, he If all facilities necessary for a better standard of living, that are found in urban areas can be made available in villages then rural people would not need to migrate to cities, he said. In fact, a child growing up in a village would get a better environment in terms of greenery and space if we can ensure all the facilities as that of a city, Howlader opined.

In partnership with

Besides rural development to accelerate equity-based growth, Howlader said JP would also emphsise on education, food and health issues of children.

In partnership with