and what type of movement is this?"

About Qaumi madrasa, the prime minister said the present government had already formed a commission in this regard while an authority would be formed following the recommendations of this commission.

She said this authority would fix curriculum for the Qaumi madrasa as well as issuing certificates, but it would not be made mandatory. With such certificates, the Qaumi madrasa students would be able to work both at home and abroad.

"But, there are some people who are in favour of such initiative and also some others who are against it. I hope, we all will make a decision in this regard," she said.

"We want that everyone living in the country will be able to perform their respective religion as this is the lesson of holy Quran," she added.

Recalling the contributions of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman towards the spread of Islam, Hasina said Bangabandhu had banned liquor and gambling and also set up Islamic Foundation alongside developing the Baitul Mukarram Mosque.

Taking a swipe at Jamaat and Hefajat for setting fire to mosques and copies of the holy Quran doing politics in the name of Islam, she said they had set fire to mosques and copies of the Quran to fulfill their political vengeance.
