

Women with Cocaine Under Wigs Arrested at Madrid Airport

From breast implants to prosthetic rumps, smugglers have devised some innovative ways to try to traffic cocaine to Europe. In one of the latest attempts, authorities said two women hid cocaine under wigs while flying from Brazil to Spain. The two suspects were arrested by authorities at the Madrid–Barajas Airport last week. Officials said the two Portuguese women travelled separately from São Paulo with 1.2 kilograms (about 42 ounces) each stashed under their fake hair.

Beirut Bombing

An al-Qaida linked group has claimed responsibility for a suicide car bombing last week in a Shiite-dominated south Beirut neighborhood. The Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant made the claim on Saturday in a statement posted onto a website page used by Sunni militants. At least five people were killed in the Thursday attack. It was the latest in a wave of attacks to hit Lebanon in recent months as Syria's civil war spills into its smaller neighbour.

Police Free Naked Man

Police in Australia have rescued a naked man who got stuck inside a washing machine while playing a game of hide-and-seek. The man reportedly hid inside the top-loading machine so he could surprise his partner. But he became stuck and it took 20 minutes for rescuers to dislodge him using olive oil as a lubricant.

Chinese Police Launch Cinematic Raid

It was like a Hollywood cinema. To fight against drug peddlers the Chinese police was in armed position, deployed helicopters, speedboats and paramilitary police to seize three tons of methamphetamine in a massive raid on a single southern village notorious for illegal drugs production. Security forces surrounded and then entered the village of Boshe, where more than a fifth of the households were suspected to be involved in trafficking of drugs.
