

PHOTO: ANURUP KANTI DAS

Medical college in Sunamganj

Not much development has taken place in Sunamganj since the British period. For example, there is no medical college in Sunamganj where students can study medicine. A full-fledged medical college may be established here next to the government medical college to provide the local people with better health care facility and a chance to fulfil their dream of becoming doctors.

Md Ashraf Hossain
Sunamganj

Sculpting the spirit of Liberation

As a student of Dhaka University, I have always been proud of Aparajeyo Bangla and now I am glad to learn about its creator, Syed Abdullah Khalid. Honestly speaking, I did not know much about him before this article. The writer deserves my heartfelt thanks for writing about this great sculptor who has immortalised the liberation war on the edifice of which this country was established.

Sm Golam Rabby
4th year Dept of Political Science
Dhaka University

★★★

As a student of DU and a son of a DU professor, I have lived on campus all my life. Aparajeyo Bangla has become a part of my life. Whenever I look at it, I feel very proud of our glorious liberation war. Thanks to the writer for writing the story behind this wonderful creation. I request the Star to keep publishing these kinds of interesting stories.

Raihan, DU

Attention Needed

The National University of Bangladesh is the largest university of Bangladesh in terms of number of students. And yet we have the worst session jam in this university. Results are also almost never published on time. We urge the government to take immediate steps to solve these problems.

Bipul, Saiful, Mijan & Mamun
Department of English
Dhaka College, Dhaka

An Impending Crisis

I was shocked to learn that the Sangu gas field 'collapsed' due to overproduction. So here is the vicious circle: If customers do not get gas, they sometimes organise strikes and adopt violent means to protest, and if the authorities keep on exploring the existing gas fields to meet the increasing demand, the fields will collapse. It seems that there is no easy solution to the problem. The reality is we simply have too many people living in a country where natural resources are scarce. We need to start thinking about long term solutions to meet our energy needs, as suggested by the writer of this article.

Ali Asgar Rizvi
Barisal

Reluctant Patients

Every year thousands of patients suffering from mild to life threatening diseases go to India, not to mention other countries, to seek medical treatment for two reasons. The treatment they receive there is reliable and affordable. Is it not a shame that we cannot trust our own doctors and we have to depend on foreign doctors to save our lives? It is true that many modern hospitals in the country, as the writer points out, may have amenities that are found only in posh hotels. Only if they had what patients expect them to have-medical care that can be trusted!

Nazma Zaman
Minto Road, Dhaka