Monet found in art hoarder's suitcase

A Claude Monet landscape has been discovered in a suitcase that belonged to late art hoarder Cornelius Gurlitt. The case, which was left at a hospital where the German had been staying, was handed over to the administrators of his estate. They are tasked with finding out if the newly uncovered artwork was stolen by the Nazis during World War Two. Gurlitt, who died in May aged 81, had a stash of 1,280 works of art hidden in his Munich apartment. They were seized by the authorities in 2012 during a search of his home as part of a tax evasion probe, and included pieces by Picasso, Chagall and Matisse. It is unclear why Gurlitt had left behind his suitcase at the hospital. Gurlitt inherited the priceless collection from his father Hildebrand, an art dealer who traded in works confiscated by the Nazis.

Blending Traditional art with Modern Dr Walid Jahin mixes acrylic with oil

FAYZA HAQ

Dr. Walid Jahin, whose exhibition opened at the gallery of Alliance Francaise last Tuesday, has been painting since 1997. He has put in as many as 15 years of painting in the media of tempera, oil and acrylic. His solos have been held in the University of Alexandria, Alexandria town, German Centre arranged by the Goethe Institut and Saad Zaghloul Cultural Centre and Art Voyage, Cairo. His current theme is "Love at the time of Chaos", which is set against the raging Israel-Palestine conflict. Walid Jahin obtained his Masters degree on Coptic Icon from Egypt in 2005. As a teacher, he instructs in egg tempera and glue tempera, thus combining traditional art with modern art. His specialty is that he blends acrylic with oil. His PhD in the Philosophy of Fine Art, 2010, was on the subject of "Updated techniques and their effect on Contemporary painting." He relies on raw fluency and the freedom of light and shade. The artist has attempted to capture Egyptian heritage. He tries to reveal the human body with the use of various materials and techniques. He tries to show figures as if they were Greek sculptures in the form of 2-D painting. Dorpon Art Foundation invited him to teach students from all over Bangladesh. The three-day workshop, for which 65 students registered, ends today. Dr. Walid Jahin and Dr. Salim met earlier at a symposium at Greece. Now there are many art professors who will meet each other to exchange perspectives in Asia and Middle East. In one, Dr. Walid Jahin's paintings at the Alliance Francaise gallery, a young man embraces a woman. Heads of dogs and other animals are merged in the forefront. In another painting, we see a couple locked in an embrace while in yet another creation, a woman at rest with a man. Parallel bar-like motifs form the backdrop. Then there are four portraits of the same person. There are two with silver, gold and red backdrop. There are two more with a silver, gold and Prussian blue background. In yet another depiction of love, the man appears in shades of purple, and woman is seen with the yellow late-afternoon sunlight falling on her face. The exhibition ends on September 13.

Chittagong hosts Super Chef

OSAMA RAHMAN

The port city will play host to the Rupchanda-Star Lifestyle Super Chef 2014's audition rounds this week. Having already visited Sylhet, Khulna, Rajshahi and Barisal, it is now Chittagong's turn to join the fray. A 700-strong participant pool makes Chittagong's turnout for the audition rounds to be one of the highest of the entire series. The land of the beaches has been simmering in anticipation in recent weeks and thus much is expected from this audition round.

The Rupchanda-Star Lifestyle Super Chef is Bangladesh's premier culinary competition, having already attracted over a 1,000 applicants from four of the visited divisions. Food connoisseurs Shawkat Osman and Shaheda Yeasmin, Jinat Azam, president of Ladies' Club, Chittagong; Daisy Moudud, senior sub-editor at The

The judges inquire a contestant about her food.

Daily Purbakone and Rowshan Ara Begum, food critic, will comprise the panel of judges for this round. The judges will sample the food presented to them on the criteria of taste, nutrition and presentation. Apart from this, the judges will test the chefs themselves, ensuring those selected have an x-factor or rather the qualities of a Super Chef.

Various forms of mezban beef and shutki are expected from the participants this time around. However, numerous participants are also likely to display the growing metropolitan character of Chittagong by their choice of food to serve. As in the previous rounds, an MCQ test will be followed by the food tasting. Then another question and answer test will be held. Those with the highest accumulated points will be invited to the next phase—the skill test. The skill test will see the judges ask the participants to perform tasks such as cook a dish in less than 10 minutes; chop vegetables a certain way or even debone fish. Scores from all the rounds will add up to decide who goes through.

This week's episode will be hosted by Naziba Basher and Taaha Chowdhury. Rupchanda-Star Lifestyle Super Chef airs every Monday at 9pm on ntv.
