But nearly two months into a US-led bombing campaign, this week's battles have provided the strongest early signs yet of what Washington and Baghdad hope could be a revival of the alliance with tribes to counter Islamic State.

"DEFENDING THEIR OWN FAMILIES"

Dhuluiya, which comes from the word "ribs", is a small town surrounded on three sides by a kink in the Tigris. A north-south highway runs through it, making it potentially one of the final stops for fighters attempting to assault Baghdad from the north.

When Islamic State fighters arrived in June, members of the al-Jubouri tribe refused their request to hand over 35 local police and security forces officers. Since then, there have been attacks and counter-attacks, while the Sunni tribesmen have been mostly besieged inside the town.

With no way out, they began receiving help from Balad, the mainly Shia sister town on the opposite bank.

"We have no access now except using boats to go to Balad, the only place which helps us. The people of Balad have helped us with food, ammunition, weapons and receiving the wounded," said Abdullah Mohammed, a fighter from the Jubour tribe. "Some of them even fight with us."

The Dhuluiya municipality chief, Turki Khalaf Turki, said the cooperation could be a model for the country: "The starting point of unity in Iraq will be Dhuluiya, which wanted unity, while Islamic State wants sedition."

On Tuesday, the fighters launched what appeared to be a coordinated assault to capture the town once and for all. Insurgents flanked Dhuluiya from the eastern and northern sides, using mortars, RPG rounds, machine guns and hand grenades, Colonel Hussein al-Jubouri from Dhuluiya's police forces said.

"We were able to stop them and our people have high morale because they are defending their town and families," he told Reuters on Wednesday, adding that the area was being targeted by mortars as they spoke. Nine residents and four fighters died.

Across the river, the insurgents also launched an attack on Balad near a Shia shrine that would have allowed them to complete their siege of Dhuluiya. Abu Gyath, an influential Shia sheikh, said fighters in Balad defended the territory to help the tribesmen across the river.

"If they control this area, God forbid, then Dhuluiya will be suffocated and it will be hard for us to send help. Otherwise, we pledged to help them as they are in a difficult situation," he said.

'FULL COOPERATION'

While such cooperation is rare, it is not unique.

In the north, members of the Shammar tribe helped Kurdish troops known as Peshmerga capture Rabia on Tuesday, the main border crossing between northern Iraq and Islamic State-held territory in eastern Syria.

Abdullah Yawar, a leading member of the tribe who long had an acrimonious relationship with Kurds, said he had been negotiating an alliance with Kurdish regional leader Massoud Barzani since Islamic State fighters swept into the north's biggest city Mosul in June.

Ahead of this week's Kurdish assault on Rabia, Yawar communicated with people inside the town to tell them that the forces coming to take it were "friendly".

"All of the Shammar are with the Peshmerga, and there is full cooperation between us," he told Reuters after the battle.

In Hit, a Euphrates River town west of Baghdad that fell to the militants on Thursday, the Sunni Albu Nimr tribe has reportedly clashed with the insurgents.

"When we saw Islamic State killing civilians, innocent people, destroying houses, they even took some of our men and we don't know their destiny till now," a member of the Albu Nimr tribe who declined to be named told Reuters.

Latif in US, may go to Canada had gone to receive an award on behalf of Bangladesh government, without actually receiving the award.

"I am under the impression after talking to them [Bangladeshi in New York] that he [Latif] may head for Canada instead of Bangladesh to see his daughter living there," said BBC's

New York correspondent Lovlu Ansari.

According to Lovlu, Latif had left John F Kennedy Airport in a taxi reportedly to visit a relative.

Bangladesh's permanent representative at the UN Abdul Momen told the BBC reporter that he did not have information on Latif to give as he had not entered the USA as a member of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's entourage.

Hasina returned home on Thursday.

She in a press conference yesterday told the media about the minister's removal from cabinet, which would be made effective following procedure.

organised at BNP chief Khaleda Zia's Gulshan office in the capital yesterday evening, just an hour after Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina at another press briefing said her government would not hold talks with the BNP.

On Abdul Latif Siddique's removal from the cabinet, Mirza Fakhrul said, "The prime minister's inaction [on the matter] has frustrated and disappointed the nation."

He claimed that in Hasina's yesterday's speech there was no clear indication when Latif would be removed from the cabinet.

The PM said she would take steps according to the proper government procedures [on the matter] while the people are demanding that Latif be punished under the law immediately, Mirza Fakhrul said.

At yesterday's press briefing, Hasina also said it was Latif Siddique who would pay the price, not her government or Awami League, for the comments he made in New York.

Fakhrul criticised the PM for her remark and said: "In a parliamentary democracy, the prime minister takes the responsibility of such comments made by her cabinet members."

"So, the PM cannot avoid the responsibility."

"Any legal measure is yet to be taken [against Latif] for making derogatory remarks on our Prophet Muhammad (pbuh)," he said.

On September 28, Latif at a reception in New York arranged by expatriate Bangladeshis said he was against hajj and Tabligh Jamaat.

The remarks triggered widespread criticisms at home and abroad, and embarrassed the government.

At yesterday's press conference at Gulshan, BNP vice chairman Shamsher Mabin Chowdhury alleged that the Awami League was spreading some false information about Sheikh Hasina's recent visit to the USA.

"There was no bilateral meeting between the prime minister and Ban Ki-moon. She got only five minutes for a photo shoot [with Ban Ki-moon]," he said.

"The government has highlighted the meeting between Hasian and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi [in New York]. But on the other hand, India did not highlight the meeting because they did not consider it important," Mabin added.

Hajj in prayers

From early morning, pilgrims crowded onto the slippery, rocky hill known as Mount Mercy, where Prophet Mohammed (pbuh) made his final sermon 14 centuries ago.

The pilgrims' attire turned the hill white in colour, and they carried umbrellas as shields against the hot desert sun.

All male pilgrims dress in white ihram to symbolise a state of purity, which also emphasises their unity regardless of social status or nationality.

Saudi Interior Minister Prince Mohammed bin Nayef said the hajj had attracted almost 1.4 million foreign pilgrims from 163 nations.

Local media report that several hundred thousand Saudis are also participating, pushing the total towards two million.

Security forces were deployed en masse across Arafat plain and Mount Mercy to organise the wave of humanity.

"This way, hajji. Don't stop here. You're blocking the way," security men shouted through loudspeakers, trying to control the crowds.

"Sometimes we have difficulties understanding each others' languages, and mostly the elderly can't understand what we are saying," said Ali al-Shemmari, a soldier stationed at the hill.

"The pilgrims believe that they should climb up, although this is not necessary... But things are going well," he said.

The number of faithful seemed fewer than past years following a crackdown by authorities on illegal pilgrims, more than 145,000 of whom have been turned away, the official Saudi Press Agency said.

Saudi authorities are also striving to protect pilgrims from two deadly viruses, Ebola and the MERS coronavirus.

No such cases have been recorded among the hajj visitors, officials say.

Pilgrims will stay at Mount Arafat until sunset when they set off for nearby Muzdalifah, where they gather pebbles for the symbolic "stoning of the devil" today.

Ambulances have been pressed in by the administration and rescue operation is on as many dead or injured could still be trapped in the stretch of road.

began hacking Rina, a slum dweller in Dhumpara, indiscriminately at Kalshi Dighir Par when she was going to her workplace around 8:00am.

Locals caught Habibur from the spot and took Rina to Chittagong Medical College Hospital where she was pronounced dead on arrival.

A murder case was filed.

said. Rather, it's him who is in trouble. This is the reality. The government has nothing to do with this."

She also said, "If anyone makes inconsiderate comments, it won't be acceptable to us. So, we will take whatever measures are needed to be taken against him and we have already given instructions to that end There's no room for confusion here."

The press conference was held to brief the media about the outcome of her visit to the US to attend the 69th UN General Assembly.

Hasina claimed her trip was very successful, and Bangladesh's image had been brightened in the UN for the country's many achievements.

However, many of the journalists' questions were on Latif, minister for posts and telecommunications and also a presidium member of the ruling Awami League.

Asked exactly when her decision would be executed, the PM said, "Some procedures must be followed for removing a minister. He will have to resign if I ask him to do so. If he does not, he will be sacked."

If he were to be removed, the file will have to be sent to the president. The president is now abroad for performing hajj and so is the cabinet secretary. The file will move once the office opens, she added.

"What I've said will be done. I said I won't keep him in the cabinet, and he won't be [in it]."

On whether Latif will lose his party post as well, Hasina, also the AL president, said the party's central working committee will decide on the matter.

"It is not acceptable that one of my party leaders will hurt religious sentiments of the people."

Latif has been getting a lot of flak for taking a swipe at the practices of hajj and Tabligh Jamaat (a movement to preach and spread Islamic values) at a discussion in New York on Sunday.

The BNP, Jatiya Party and several Islamist parties have demanded his removal, arrest and punishment.

The PM said as soon as she was informed of those remarks, she ordered the officials concerned to prepare the file for his removal. "I did not take a second to give the decision."

NO DIALOGUE WITH BNP

Hasina outright rejected any possibility of talks with the BNP to end the political crisis centring on the controversial January 5 election.

The BNP and different national and international bodies have long been pressing for dialogues.

Asked if the UN secretary general called for initiating talks, she said, "This time he didn't say anything. Perhaps he doesn't see anything wrong."

Hasina then went on to ask the journalist who made the query if he

(the journalist) would sit for talks with someone who wanted to kill him.

"With whom will I sit for talks? With the ones who resorted to corruption, blasts and grenade attacks? Those who killed my party lawmakers, Ivy Rahman and party leaders and workers, and attacked minority communities?"

"Will I have to sit with those who burnt alive hundreds of people, burnt hundreds of holy Quran and set mosques afire?"

GOVT TO GO TOUGH

On the BNP's threats of a tougher movement after the Eid, she said Khaleda's movement meant killing of people.

"The government will do what it has done before," she said, adding that her administration knew how to deal with such movements.

"I don't know who's backing her [Khaleda Zia]."

Replying to a query, she said an accused is allowed to go free even after testimony by FBI. Many leading papers don't write about this. They are out with binoculars only to find the Awami League's faults.

'HISTORY DISTORTION'

Queried if she thinks the recent books by Tajuddin Ahmad's daughter Sharmin Ahmad and AK Khandaker have links to BNP Senior Vice-Chairman Tarique Rahman's comments on the history of Bangladesh, Hasina said, "Everyone is writing at whim. How old were they at the time about which they are writing? And one of my ministers ... he was a freedom fighter and he has written it ... now the publisher should also be asked how they could publish a book containing false information or If you observe the patterns of the two books, it seems the same person is the writer of those."

'LIFE AT RISK'

The premier said her life was at risk.

"Why do you forget that my father, mother and brothers were killed on August 15, 1975, and after that the killers were rewarded and socially and politically established by Ziaur Rahman, Ershad and Khaleda Zia?"

She said she returned to the country and joined politics knowing that risk.

"Had I cared about my life, you wouldn't have gotten back democracy. That's the reality."

Replying to another query, she said the trial of the 21 August grenade attack cases should be expedited.

About the extradition treaty with India, Hasina said talks were on in this regard and there was some progress on the matter.

She also said she spoke with the US authorities about the killing of Nazmul, a leader of the US chapter of AL, who was killed in New York recently.

On the other hand, Ershad briefed the party leaders and activists at Palli Nibash. He condemned the attack on the leaders and activists for their activities.

He asked the party men to stay united under the new district and city convening committees. "I'll never change my mind regarding these two committees," he said.
