LS SUGGESTS

VINTAGE RENDEZVOUS

THE season is typically filled with boisterous parties, and noisy merry-makers. We're all for that, but for a change of pace, try indulging in an elegant, cosy tea party. Winter is the right season to gather friends over an intimate chai.

Making arrangements for a perfect, winter tea party is not easy. The effort is equivalent to hosting a proper lunch or dinner, although the event is considered 'less' formal.

Greet your guests with arrival drinks. Try to provide a variety of teas-- Earl Grey, peppermint, camomile, fruit, and of course herbal. There aren't any rules when it comes to the food, but a standard afternoon tea comprises of a layer of sandwiches, a layer of cakes and a layer of scones or teacakes. However, you could also throw in pastries, or biscuits.

Sandwiches require minimal effort, but get ahead by preparing your fillings in advance and assembling just before proceedings begin. Shortbreads, cookies, ginger nuts...take inspiration from your childhood biscuit tin.

The menu at your afternoon get-together need not be fussy. Whole grain crackers stand in for traditional tea sandwiches. Sliced eggs with mustard, and Dhaka cheese and cucumber are healthy toppings. Toasted nuts dressed up with coconut also make an easy snack.
