TALIBAN SCHOOL ATTACK Pak army retaliates, kills 57 militants Imran Khan calls off sit-in

AGENCIES

Pakistan army retaliated to the deadly Taliban attack at Peshawar school by killing 57 militants in massive airstrikes in the Khyber tribal region where the suicide bombers were reportedly trained.

The army launched 20 airstrikes on Wednesday on several Taliban hideouts in Tirah valley area of Khyber tribal region which is adjacent to Peshawar and killed 57 militants, an army spokesman said.

The strikes were launched after reports that militants involved in the Peshawar army school attack in which 148 people, including 132 school children were killed, were trained in the Bara area of Khyber.

The military said that the ongoing operation Khyber-1 in the district is being reviewed.

Pakistan had on Wednesday pledged to announce a "national plan" to tackle terrorism within a week with Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif saying "this entire region" should be cleared of terrorism.

Meanwhile, Pakistani opposition leader Imran Khan Wednesday called off a four-month long protest movement to topple the government following the massacre.

His announcement came a day ahead of his party's planned country-wide shutdown intended to force Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif to resign and for his government to conduct an impartial inquiry into allegations of fraud in the 2013 election. Khan told supporters outside parliament that ending the 126-day vigil was the "need of the hour".

Auschwitz guard, 93, to stand trial

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

He will almost certainly go down in history as the last Nazi death camp guard to face justice. Yet 93-year-old Oskar Gröning says he merely worked as an "accountant" in Auschwitz and feels duty-bound to confront those who claim the Holocaust never happened.

After decades of legal inaction, Gröning is to face charges of being an accessory to the murder of 300,000 Auschwitz prisoners while he worked at the camp. On Tuesday, Hanover state prosecutors ruled he was fit to stand trial.

Gröning's trial opens in a German court next April.

His case highlights the failure of the German judiciary adequately to bring Holocaust perpetrators to justice since the end of the Second World War. An estimated 1.2 million were murdered at Auschwitz. Some 6,500 SS guards worked at the camp but only 49 have been convicted of war crimes.

Efraim Zuroff, chief Nazi hunter at the Israel office of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, said he welcomed the decision to prosecute Gröning. "The passage of time does not diminish the crimes of the Holocaust," he told The Independent.

Gröning was one in a line-up of a so-called "dirty dozen" of surviving Auschwitz guards who have been identified over the past two years. He is the only one to face trial. Charges against the remaining 11 suspects were dropped because they were considered too frail or ill.

In the decades after the Nuremberg trials, German prosecutors relied almost exclusively on evidence, largely from eyewitnesses, that linked suspects to specific murders in order to convict them. The practice explains the low conviction rate of Nazi death camp guards. It took a new generation of prosecutors to bring about the recent change in the German judiciary's attitude to Nazi war crimes. In 2011 they set a legal precedent by securing the conviction of the former Sobibor Nazi death camp guard John Demjanjuk by a Munich court.

Demjanjuk was found guilty of being an accessory to the murder of 28,000 Dutch Jews at Sobibor, an "extermination-only" camp in Nazi occupied Poland, in which all prisoners were gassed within hours of their arrival. There were no eyewitnesses at Demjanjuk's trial. But judges for the first time accepted the prosecution's argument he was an accessory to mass murder simply by having worked as a guard at the camp. Prosecutors will use the same legal arguments at Gröning's trial. However Gröning has already denied the charges.

The mullah behind the Pak school attack

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Once, if you wanted to speak with the man known as "Mullah Radio", you had to travel to the remote, mountainous lands of Swat province in north-west Pakistan. There, between radio segments, a bearded preacher who would later assume command of a Taliban insurgency that on Tuesday killed more than 100 schoolchildren, would perhaps drop by on his white horse.

That's what happened when the journalist Nicholas Schmidle arrived at the mullah's compound in 2007. At the time, the mullah, Maulana Fazlullah, was riding high.

Tens of thousands of people in Swat were tuning in to his illegal FM radio station, from which he excoriated the evils of female education and urged jihad. A cult figure was born.

By Fazlullah's twisted logic, the attacks made sense. The killings were a response to a recent military crackdown on Taliban activities.

In 2012, Fazlullah claimed responsibility for an assassination attempt on Malala Yousafzai. So Fazlullah allegedly dispatched a gunman who shot her in the head.

Born in 1975, he grew up with the name Fazle Hayat in a simple rural family, according to a New America Foundation report.

In 2004, Fazlullah launched an unauthorised radio channel people took to calling "Maulana Radio". His conservative, anti-American, anti-technology, anti-vaccination message resonated with the local population.

The fervour he inspired made him an attractive candidate to take over the Taliban late last year when the CIA killed his predecessor, Hakimullah Mehsud, in a drone strike.

And then came Tuesday's assault on the school in the north-western city of Peshawar.

India's largest rocket launched successfully

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

Taking an important step towards sending humans into space, India successfully flight tested the atmospheric re-entry of an experimental unmanned rocket after its heaviest launch vehicle GSLV Mk-III blasted off yesterday.

After its lift-off from Sriharikota in southern Indian state of Andhra Pradesh, the 42.4 m expendable rocket of Indian Space Research Organization ascended to the sky with a one-way ticket as its design life span is just around five minutes.

The Rs 155- crore mission tests the rocket's atmospheric flight stability powered by two engines with around four-tonne luggage.

Just over five minutes into the flight, the rocket threw out the giant cupcake shaped crew module at an altitude of 126 km.

The crew module was navigated by remote-control and made to re-enter the atmosphere at a massive velocity. It was slowed down with massive parachutes, the largest ever to be used by India, before it plunged into the Bay of Bengal.

If India can send astronauts to space using an indigenous rocket, it will become the fourth country in the world to have the technology of sending humans into space, after the United States, Russia and China.

ISRO Chairman K Radhakrishnan said "India started development of the rocket a decade ago and today completed the first experimental flight. The performance of the solid and the liquid engines were as expected."

Yesterday's test came after successful launch India's Mars mission last year.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi congratulated ISRO scientists for the successful test flight of the rocket.

Palace denies Queen's abdication rumours

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Buckingham Palace has been forced to deny rumours the Queen is to stand down in her Christmas Day broadcast, after a bookmaker said it was suspending bet following a flurry of "unusual" activity.

Coral said it had been offering odds of 10-1 that the monarch would stand down during the address, which goes out at 3pm in every Commonwealth nation.

A spokesperson for the Queen said that it was the Palace's policy "not to comment on any bookmakers' work".

And while there have been a number of royal abdications involving other European monarchies in recent years, the source pointed to the Queen's oath on her coronation that "whether long or short, her entire life would be in service of the nation".
