blasts Censor Board, says banning content isn't right

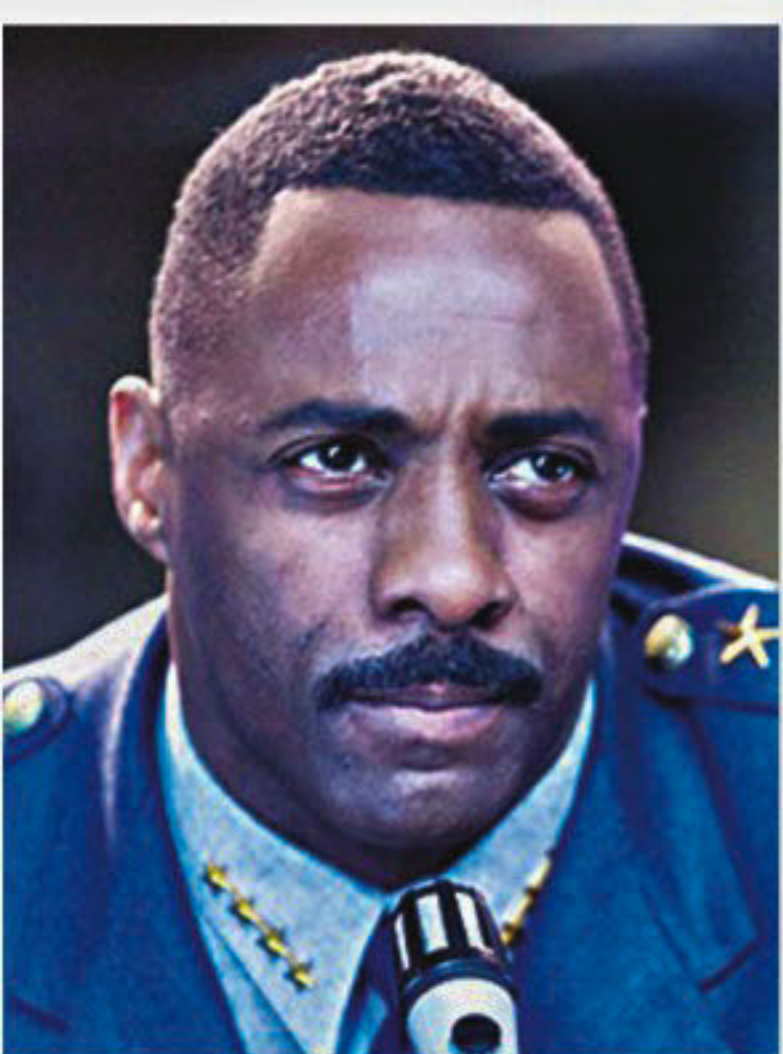

Coming down heavily on the Censor Board, which recently stoked controversy by banning some objectionable words, actor Aamir Khan today said he is totally against banning any kind of material in media or films. "I am totally against banning any kind of material. When the I&B minister spoke to us, he also clarified that actually the ministry has no such list of cuss words. It's a certification board and not the censor board. It was nice to hear that," the Bollywood superstar said at Ficci-Frames, an annual jamboree of media and entertainment industry last week. There were reports that the recently appointed Censor Board chairman Pahlaj Nihalani had revived a 2003 order to ban a list of 28 objectionable or cuss words, including Bombay in any movies or documentaries. Following public outcry, however, the list was withdrawn.

would 'love' to get married again

Britney Spears may be divorced twice already, but that doesn't mean she wouldn't get married again. The 33-year-old pop star, who has 2 sons from her 2nd marriage to Kevin Federline, said that she still believes in fairytale, and given a chance, would love to tie the knot again, People magazine reported. The 'toxic' singer, who's been dating producer Charlie Ebersol, 32, for the past 6 months, said that for her marriage was about "loving each other and communicating right and being respectful and honest." However, she added that love with her children was "just unconditional and that's hard to find." Spears said that though she was satisfied with her two boys, she was open to having one more child in future, and would love it if it was a girl, a mini version of her.

STAR TREK 3

in Early Talks to Play the Villain

After Sherlock star and future Marvel superhero Benedict Cumberbatch played the primary antagonist last time around, Paramount Pictures is looking at another BBC television veteran to play the villain in the untitled Star Trek 3. Rumor had it that fellow TV superstar Bryan Cranston (Breaking Bad, Malcolm in the Middle) was in the running to play Star Trek 3's villain but a new scoop from Variety indicates that Idris Elba (The Wire, Luthor) is currently in talks for the mystery role. They also claim production doesn't begin until a little later in June and that the plot might involve Klingons – whom we saw briefly in Star Trek 2 and only in deleted scenes for the first J.J. Abrams Star Trek. While Abrams abandoned ship so to speak, to helm Star Wars: Episode VII for Disney instead of Star Trek 3, he remains involved as a producer and promises that co-writer (and star) Simon Pegg has "wonderful ideas" for this movie. Trek 3 will be directed by Justin Lin (Fast & Furious 3-6) and will see the return of the entire main cast and bridge crew from Star Trek and Star Trek Into Darkness, all of whom signed for a trilogy of features.
