

Growing up as supporters

AZMIN AZRAN

Cricket is the source of all major occasions of celebration we've had in recent years. As spectators, we're known for backing our team to the hilt, but does that include losing all sense of civility in celebration?

This write up is in context of the recent debacle involving Indian supporter Sudhir Kumar Gautham, who was reportedly harassed on the streets of Dhaka following Bangladesh's win in the 2nd ODI during the recently concluded series. There have been contradictory reports in both the Bangladeshi and Indian media.

I've had the opportunity to be present in the galleries for the last couple of series at the Sher-e-Bangla National Stadium in Mirpur, and one of the things you cannot help but notice is how aggressive the crowd is towards the opposition. Away teams can expect a hostile environment, but where do we draw the line?

Unfortunate occurrences aren't new for the Mirpur faithful. We've had embarrassing losses in the past and that resulted in public backlash, like the stoning of the West Indies team bus after a huge loss in the 2011 World Cup. For those who had hoped this was a one-off incident, they would be disappointed as more of these things kept happening. There have been instances when our very own players reacted to how the crowd treated them. Very recently, in the series against India, we saw Indian fielders getting involved in squabbles with the crowd, and in cases such as these, the provocation usually comes from the stands. Considering our history, the reported incident with Sudhir Gautham shouldn't surprise anyone. Even if it didn't happen, something like this is always on the cards.

Attacks on visiting teams or their supporters should never happen.

People are not allowed to be an away supporter in Mirpur. The people who wave opposition flags that they show on TV are mostly sitting in groups in one of the galleries closer to the dressing rooms, where security is tight. In the stands, however, I've seen people get threatened and abused for wearing an away jersey, to an extent that law enforcement officials had to intervene. All they can do is escort the away supporters out of the galleries for their own safety.

The people who feel there isn't a place for away supporters in the stands could try and put themselves in different shoes. Would they feel it was fair if they went to the Eden Gardens in Kolkata for a Bangladesh vs India match, and were shunned for supporting their own country? Probably not. The Tigers have grown as a team in recent years and they're giving us more and more reasons to celebrate. It'd be a shame if we let our actions ruin these amazing moments. The team performs for the spectators, and it is up to them to accept that gift gracefully.

5 KINDS OF PEOPLE IN A FACEBOOK GROUP

RAFEE SHAAMS

The following are the five kinds of people I see lurking in Facebook groups. Try steering clear of them.

The Repost Guy

This person will repeatedly post links to stuff that have already been posted on the group before. Sometimes he'll repost his own link because that's who he is. I once tried doing this, but the repost guy in my group requested me not to steal his thunder, and I listened to him the first time because I didn't want him to repeat himself.

The Essayist

This person has the amazing ability to write a 500 word comment with terrible grammar on any given post. He might not even bother reading your post to see what it is about. His essay will be ready within 10 minutes, enlightening you on how you

 Vary Nyc Boy Rajib
2 mins

add me i m blok

Like Comment

are wrong about everything in your life and that this essay will save you from moral ineptitude and the pathetic life you no doubt have.

The Guy Who Has a New Online Shop and Wants You to Buy Stuff from Him

These people need to understand that there's a time and place for everything. They can't possibly join a Filipino Ariana Grande Fan Club and expect people to buy their handmade bookmarks made from tissues and glue. Posting ads on those places is pointless.

The "Add Me Gurls" Guy

They sprout out of everywhere. From dubious news sites to the blogs of East Asian teenagers, you will find them proclaiming "add me ;)" religiously in the comments section. I don't see much of them in Facebook groups nowadays, but that's mostly because I've acquired a little self-respect and left all the so called "entertaining" groups.

That One Person Who Will Comment "F" On Every Post

Usually when one thinks a particular discussion is interesting and that s/he should "follow" it, they write "F" on the comment so that they might get notified when other people comment on it. But there will always be that person who'd write "F" on every single post because nobody likes or comments in his stuff and he needs notifications to save himself from all the loneliness.

There's also the guy who thinks he can have a relevant discussion in a group, but that kind is slowly being driven to extinction. Let's not count them.

Rafee Shaams is an amalgam personality, an accretion of various sub-personas, identities that are individual facets of a great jewel mind whose various facets exist beyond normal three-dimensional space and can only be perceived by children and the insane. He can be reached at rafeeshaams@gmail.com

Learn & Grow
Create & Express
Protect & Serve

SKILLS FOR LIFE 2015

For more information & online application:
facebook.com/UlabSkillsForLife

For A level & HSC Students

FREE of charge

Core Courses

11 Classes

- Write a Personal Statement
- Advanced MS Office
- Money Matters
- Choose your Career
- Presentation Skills
- Public Speaking
- Everyday Law
- Disaster Safety
- Sustainable Living

5 Concentrations

3 Classes + project day

- Web Designing
- Creative Writing
- Film Making with Mobile
- Journalism
- Animation

Organized by

UNIVERSITY OF LIBERAL ARTS BANGLADESH
Communications Office, Campus B
719/A Satmasjid Road, Dhanmondi, Dhaka-1209

Phone: +88-0173008704

(9:00 am - 5:00 pm, Sunday to Thursday)

Email: communications@ulab.edu.bd

