Black day for Hindus in Ctg

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY and WASIM BIN HABIB

April 13 is a day that inhabitants of five Raozan villages in Chittagong would perhaps never forget.

On that day in 1971, the villagers saw a dreadful destruction and massacre unleashed on them. It's the day when they suffered a loss they would never

ASHUTOSH SARKAR

He led a band of ruthless killers and teamed up with the Pakistan occupation army to massacre over a hundred unarmed civilians and loot and destroy village after village in Chittagong during the 1971 Liberation War.

The brutality of the self-proclaimed brigadier gained such notoriety that people in their thousands fled the country fearing for their lives and took shelter in India.

He turned his "Goods Hill" house in Chittagong town into a torture centre, and subjected many freedom fighters and pro-liberation people to brutalities.

He also handed over Awami League activists to the Pakistan army to have them killed.

The man, Salauddin Quader Chowdhury, never repented for his wartime crimes. He eluded justice and held immense political clout in independent Bangladesh.

He has built an image of arrogance for himself and remained at the centre of many controversies.

With a smirk always etched on his face, Salauddin Quader Chowdhury revelled in spitting venom at his opponents, be it in politics or in other spheres, using vulgar and indecent words. Even his party chief

KILLING OF NATUN Ordered by father, executed by son

Natun Chandra Sinha

WASIM BIN HABIB and TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

It was a summer morning in April 1971.

Natun Chandra Sinha -- a social worker, entrepreneur and philanthropist -- was offering his morning prayers at a temple in his house in Chittagong's Raozan.

Those present at the Gohira village house -- known as Kundeshwari Complex -- had been hearing intermittent gunshots from adjoining areas for quite a while.

Suddenly, several vehicles carrying arms-wielding Pakistani army men stopped outside the house.

As the Pak soldiers, who already had gained notoriety for butchering the Bangalees, hopped off the vehicles and approached the house, everyone either fled the house or hid themselves. Only Natun stayed behind at the temple.

The army men, led by Salauddin Quader Chowdhury, stormed inside the house and found septuagenarian Natun, owner of herbal medicine manufacturer Kundeshwari Owshadhaloy.

BNP upset, aggrieved

AL terms verdict historic

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The BNP yesterday said it was "upset, surprised, aggrieved and shocked" over the Appellate Division verdict upholding the death penalty of its leader Salauddin Quader Chowdhury.

The ruling Awami League, on the other hand, termed the verdict "historic" and said it has fulfilled people's expectation. AL Joint General Secretary Jahangir Kabir Nanak gave the reaction at a press conference at the party chief Sheikh Hasina's Dhanmondi office.

Justice arrives yet they are in fear

Hindus lock themselves in upon verdict

ARUN BIKASH DEY, back from Raozan

Salauddin Quader Chowdhury is incarcerated awaiting execution. Yet, the places he terrorised 44 years ago turned into ghost towns yesterday with villagers fearing retribution from his men.

Salauddin was the symbol of terror for the inhabitants of Jagatmallopara and Unasattarpara villages of Raozan in Chittagong during the Liberation War.

They, especially the Hindus, were tortured and persecuted by this war criminal in 1971.

Forty years later, amid trepidation, they testified against him and got justice when the International War Crimes Tribunal-1 awarded him the death penalty for genocide.
