Bollywood a good phase for artists now, says

IRRFAN KHAN

Actor Irrfan Khan is enjoying the current phase of the Hindi film industry as he feels it is offering opportunities to artists in doing something novel. The 48-year-old "Piku" star, calling 1990s a bad time for films, said things have improved for creativity in Bollywood. From "Life in A Metro" and "Dil Kabaddi" to "Paan Singh Tomar" and "The Lunchbox", the actor is known for bringing something new to the table with every film. When asked for his preference in roles, Irrfan said, "It is a never ending thing. No actor can encompass the whole life in his career as there are so many aspects of life. This is just the beginning." A well know Indian name in Hollywood, Irrfan will be seen next in Meghna Gulzar's "Talvar", Sanjay Gupta's "Jazbaa" with Aishwarya Rai Bachchan and American thriller "Inferno", directed by Ron Howard.

BRADLEY COOPER

will heat up the Oscar race in

BURNT

By now, it seems like a perennial contender for Oscars is none other than Bradley Cooper. He's on quite the run recently, between his collaborations with David O. Russell, the stunning success that was "American Sniper", and just being one of our most charismatic A-list stars. Later this year, he'll look to again appeal to Academy voters, not just with a supporting role of Russell in "Joy", but also in the culinary comedy/drama "Burnt", which has taken a bit to develop. Cooper has helped shepherd it to the screen and judging from the recent Trailer that dropped, this is going to be an intense flick. If things break the right way for it, you could also see it becoming another Oscar vehicle for Cooper.
